Advisory Memorandum

To: The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights
From: The Ohio Advisory Committee to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights
Date: May, 2018
Subject: Voting Rights in Ohio

On January 17, 2018, the Ohio Advisory Committee (Committee) to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights (Commission) elected to undertake a study of voting rights in the state. Specifically, in support of the Commission’s 2018 Statutory Enforcement Report on voting rights in the United States, the Committee sought to review related testimony received during a Committee briefing in 2006 to: (1) determine the extent to which voting rights concerns raised in 2006 remained challenges in Ohio in 2018; and (2) identify any new voting rights concerns that may have surfaced in Ohio since that time. As part of its review, the Committee held additional briefings on March 2, 2018 and March 9, 2018. Panelists who had presented to the Committee in 2006 on the topic of voting rights were invited to return to update their testimony. Additional panelists currently involved in voting administration and advocacy were also invited to participate.¹

The following advisory memorandum results from a review of the testimony provided to the Committee in 2006, combined with the additional testimony obtained in 2018. It begins with a brief background of the issue to be considered by the Committee. It then identifies primary findings as they emerged from this testimony. Finally, it makes recommendations for addressing related civil rights concerns. This memorandum focuses on the right of all eligible U.S. Citizens to participate in free and fair elections, to vote, and to have their vote counted. While other important topics may have surfaced throughout the Committee’s inquiry, matters that are outside the scope of this specific civil rights mandate are left for another discussion. This memorandum and the recommendations included within it were adopted by a majority of the Committee on May 24, 2018.

Background

The right to vote is one of the most fundamental components of democracy—so important, that the U.S. Constitution includes four amendments protecting it.² Established under the Civil Rights Act of 1957, as part of its core mandate, the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights is directed to “[i]nvestigate formal allegations that citizens are being deprived of their right to vote and have ² U.S. Const. amend. XV, XIX, XXIV, XXVI. Note: Amendment XV guarantees the right to vote shall not be abridged or denied on the basis of “race, color, or previous condition of servitude”; Amendment XIX guarantees that the right to vote will not be abridged or denied “on account of sex”; Amendment XXIV guarantees that the right to vote will not be abridged or denied “by any reason of failure to pay poll tax or other tax”; Amendment XXVI guarantees the right to vote will not be abridged or denied on account of age for all citizens 18 years or older.

that vote counted by reason of their color, race, religion, or national origin.”\textsuperscript{3} Throughout its history, the Commission and its Advisory Committees have released numerous reports on the state of voting rights in the U.S.\textsuperscript{4}

The Committee notes that the Commission is presently conducting a study of voting rights in the United States nationally, in fulfillment of its 2018 statutory enforcement report to be submitted to Congress and the President. As part of this study, the Commission has requested that its advisory committees consider undertaking studies on voting rights in their respective jurisdictions. In this context, the Ohio Advisory Committee submits this memorandum to the Commission regarding the present state of voting rights in Ohio.

\textbf{Overview of Testimony}

In considering this study the Committee sought balanced and diverse input from involved stakeholders representing all relevant perspectives. During each of the 2006 and the 2018 hearings, the Committee invited testimony from academic experts, county voting officials, state level elected officials representing both major political parties, and community advocates.\textsuperscript{5} All invited parties who were unable to attend personally were offered the opportunity to send a delegate, or to submit a written statement offering their perspective on the civil rights concerns in question. During the 2006 hearings, the Committee was able to achieve reasonably diverse and inclusive participation from each of the aforementioned parties. During the Committee’s 2018 revisiting of the topic, however, despite numerous outreach attempts, no representative from the office of the Ohio Secretary of State chose to participate, and the Committee was unable to secure Republican representation from the current Ohio Legislature. The Committee acknowledges these limitations in the perspectives that follow.

\textbf{Findings}

In keeping with their duty to inform the Commission of (1) matters related to discrimination or a denial of equal protection of the laws; and (2) matters of mutual concern in the preparation of reports of the Commission to the President and the Congress,\textsuperscript{6} the Ohio Advisory Committee submits the following findings and recommendations to the Commission regarding voting rights in Ohio. These findings and recommendations are intended to highlight the most salient civil rights themes as they emerged from the Committee’s inquiry. In recognition of the Commission’s continued study of this topic, in lieu of providing a detailed discussion of each finding presented, the Committee offers a general outline of themes, along with appropriate additional resources, as topics of reference for the Commission’s 2018 statutory enforcement report. The complete meeting transcripts are included in Appendix A for further reference.

The following findings result directly from the testimony received, and reflect the views of the cited panelists. While each assertion has not been independently verified by the Committee, panelists were chosen to testify due to their professional experience, academic credentials, subject expertise, and firsthand knowledge of the topics at hand.

1. Voter discrimination can be thought of in two separate but related and equally important categories: voter denial, and vote dilution.

   a. Voter denial includes practices that impede eligible voters from casting their vote or from having their votes counted, such as strict voter ID requirements and limits on early and absentee voting.⁷

   b. Vote dilution refers to practices that may weaken the strength of some groups’ votes, “particularly groups that are defined along lines of race or ethnicity,”⁸ such as gerrymandering.

2. Voting is regarded as a fundamental right and has been acknowledged as such by the U.S. Supreme Court since the 19th century.⁹

   a. Based on the standard set forth by Crawford v. Marion County Election Board,¹⁰ if voting regulations burden voting rights, the court may consider the severity of the burden, the number of people affected, and the potential for disparate impact.¹¹ The state then must justify the burden by demonstrating that it serves an important regulatory interest.¹²

   b. Section 2 of the Voting Rights Act, as amended in 1982, allows a claim to be made of race discrimination based on a result that is discriminatory, regardless of intent.¹³

3. Voting practices and requirements in the United States vary widely from state to state.\textsuperscript{14}

a. Variance in election law results in confusion and misinformation.\textsuperscript{15} For example, differences in voter ID laws between states may leave voters confused as to what is required in Ohio.\textsuperscript{16} Individuals with felonies on their record are permitted to vote immediately upon completion of their sentence in Ohio, but not in other states.\textsuperscript{17} This may lead many such individuals to be unaware of their right to vote, and may disproportionately impact people of color.\textsuperscript{18}

b. There has been a significant increase in election related litigation in the United States since 2000.\textsuperscript{19} Litigation and resulting frequent changes in voting laws may contribute to voter and poll worker confusion regarding voting requirements.\textsuperscript{20} Changes are particularly damaging when rules are modified shortly before an election.\textsuperscript{21} The Ohio Secretary of State’s Office has reportedly not allocated any funding to voter education to make voters aware of the changes in 2018.\textsuperscript{22} “Community groups and nonprofit organizations have had to stand in the gap to provide voters with information about the mechanics of how, where, and when to vote.”\textsuperscript{23}

a. State law requires poll workers to be trained every three years, and voting location managers to be trained before every federal primary election.\(^{24}\) However, some counties implement additional training for poll workers.\(^{25}\)

b. Franklin County trains poll workers before every election.\(^{26}\) Franklin County also allows its poll workers to practice their roles the weekend before an election, and to be trained in specialized roles, to avoid an overload of information during the trainings.\(^{27}\)

c. In 2006, the Secretary of State’s Office testified that funding was available for poll worker training, though only 14 counties had utilized those funds.\(^{28}\) The Secretary’s office did not provide updated testimony in 2018.

5. Voters with Disabilities

a. Individuals with disabilities, particularly those who may reside in institutional settings, are often unaware of their voting rights.\(^{29}\) Increased education is needed.\(^{30}\)

b. The Committee heard testimony about individuals who are hospitalized outside of their county having difficulty getting access to absentee ballots to which they are entitled.\(^{31}\)

c. Ohio has a number of provisions such as curbside voting, accessible voting machines, and allowances for personal assistance that improve the accessibility of most polling locations.\(^{32}\) Poll worker and voter education remain the most important factors in making sure these accommodations are properly implemented.\(^{33}\) One panelist recommended establishing a disability liaison at each polling location rather than training every poll worker, because the amount of information conveyed to poll workers can be overwhelming.\(^{34}\)

d. In an effort to ensure that all polling places are accessible, some polling locations have been consolidated. This has led to transportation issues as voters must travel longer distances to vote.

e. Signature matching as a form of identity verification may present a barrier to individuals with disabilities who either cannot sign their name or whose signature may vary significantly from time to time. Currently there is no accommodation for such individuals outside of designating a power of attorney for voting.

6. Provisional voting in Ohio

a. Ohio has seen a number of cases regarding the counting of provisional ballots since 2004. One panelist noted that Ohio is one of the top states in the country for the number of provisional ballots and the number of ballots that are thrown out. If provisional ballots are not counted, the voter has no right to challenge that decision. In close races, provisional ballots can have a significant impact on the outcomes of the election.

b. Franklin County developed an envelope for provisional ballots that includes a template to indicate to the voter which items must be completed in order to ensure the ballot will be counted. This has resulted in a reduction in the number of ballots being ruled invalid.

c. Boards of Elections may make varying efforts to count provisional ballots; however, they are limited by the Secretary of State’s Office as to what information they can access in an effort to validate ballots and count them.

d. In 2012, one house race was decided by just four votes. In this election, the local Board of Elections threw out votes because of data entry errors affecting provisional ballots, even though voters provided the correct information.

7. Early and Absentee Voting

a. In Ohio, all counties are permitted only one location for early, in person voting, with limited hours, regardless of the county’s population. This disproportionately results in long lines for voting in urban, more densely populated counties who must accommodate more voters.49

b. In 2014, Ohio passed a bill (S.B. 205 (2014)) stating that absentee ballot applications may only be mailed by the Secretary of State if the legislature appropriates money to do so.50

i. This has disproportionately affected urban counties that have traditionally sent out absentee ballot applications as a way to encourage early voting in order to lessen problems with long lines and crowded conditions that do not affect more rural voters.51

ii. This same bill also instituted “hyper-technical” rules that disqualify ballots for paperwork errors “such as writing a name in legible cursive instead of print, omitting a zip code from an address, or missing a single digit from a social security number.”52

c. Limitations on absentee mail-in voting and early voting may also disproportionately affect African American voters53 and people with disabilities54 who tend to gravitate toward such alternative voting provisions.

d. Absentee ballots are tracked and processed at the county level.55

i. Voter ability to track receipt of their ballot may help to improve voter confidence in early voting.56

48 See Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 3501.10(C) seemingly limits early voting to the county clerk’s office (“The board of elections may maintain permanent or temporary branch offices at any place within the county, provided that, if the board of elections permits electors to vote at a branch office, electors shall not be permitted to vote at any other branch office or any other office of the board of elections.”); See also: Turcer Testimony, 2018 Transcript I, p. 10 lines 15-21; Clyde Testimony, 2018 Transcript II, p. 9 lines 21-26.

ii. There is currently no reporting to the Secretary of State’s Office on tracking or processing of absentee ballots.57

iii. Some concern was raised that counties may be inconsistent in how they count provisional and absentee ballots.58

e. Ohio introduced no fault absentee/early voting in 2008.59 Previously, early voting had been available only to those with demonstrated need.60 Individual counties have made efforts to advertise and educate voters about this opportunity. 40% of voters in Franklin County cast their ballots early in 2016, and the County spent $245,000 on advertising to announce the opportunity.61 Aggressive advertising for early and absentee voting has helped to reduce long lines at the polls on Election Day in Franklin County.62

8. Voter Registration

a. As of 2017, Ohio allows citizens to register to vote online.63 While this provision has been lauded as a positive expansion of voter access, it was noted that online registration requires a driver’s license or state ID.64 This requirement excludes eligible voters who may not have a state ID or driver’s license such as students temporarily residing in Ohio who have not obtained a state ID, the elderly, Ohioans with disabilities, individuals living in poverty, those who do not drive, and others.65

b. Ohio closes voter registration 30 days before an election, the longest time allowed under federal law.66 Same day voter registration and automatic voter registration are directly correlated with voter turnout.67 States with same day registration reportedly have 5-10% higher voter turnout than Ohio. In 2016, Ohio saw its lowest voter turnout as a state since 2000 for a major presidential election.

c. Ohio previously allowed same day registration and early voting for one week, between 35 and 30 days prior to an election. Once known as “Golden Week” this opportunity has been canceled.

d. Ohio is currently one of the most aggressive states in purging voter registration rolls.

i. If a voter does not participate in a general election, the local Board of Elections is to mail a postcard asking the voter to confirm registration status and address. If the voter does not respond to the postcard, or vote in the next two election cycles, the voter’s registration is canceled with no further notice.

ii. If a citizen attempts to vote after his or her voter registration has been canceled, he or she is given a provisional ballot. The provisional ballot is not counted for the present election cycle; however, the envelope containing the provisional ballot, if completed properly, can double as a voter registration form, re-registering the voter for the next election cycle.

iii. Ohio has canceled the voter registration of more than two million voters since 2011 for failure to vote in two consecutive elections. Litigation challenging this process as a violation of the National Voter Registration Act is currently pending before the U.S. Supreme Court.

iv. Canceling voter registration of those who have not voted in at least two election cycles may disproportionately impact African American voters and voters from urban areas, as well as others living in poverty, those without a permanent home, and individuals with disabilities, “who may find it difficult to vote and perhaps only vote in presidential elections as a result.”

v. Infrequent voters are moved to an “inactive” list prior to their registration being canceled. In 2016, 13% of registered voters (approximately 1 million people) were deemed “inactive.” These voters did not receive information from the Secretary of State’s Office about vote by mail, in contrast to “active” registered voters, raising concerns about equal treatment. There was also concern that voters flagged as “inactive” were disproportionately black voters.

vi. Funding available for new voting machines is proposed to be based on the number of registered voters. Large cancelations of voter registration may impact the funding available in the most affected counties.

vii. Some panelists indicated that choosing not to vote is an exercise of First Amendment rights to free speech, and should be protected as such.

e. It is important for the Secretary of State to maintain accurate voter rolls.

i. Advocates and legal experts have noted vehicle registration changes, death records, and change of address notifications are more reliable indicators of a voter’s continued eligibility than failure to vote in two consecutive elections.

ii. In 2016 Ohio joined the Electronic Resource Information Center, an interstate data sharing service sponsored by the Pew Center, which reportedly may improve the accuracy of voter rolls.

f. Ohio maintains a state wide voter database so that if a voter moves from one county to another, both counties are notified. The voter is removed from the rolls in their old county and added to the roll in their new county.92 There is no such tracking system available at the national level.93

9. Voting Administration

a. Ohio permits a number of forms of voter identification, including utility bills, government checks, and pay stubs.94 This is less strict than many other states and helps to facilitate voter access.95

b. Voting machines in Ohio are aging, and funding for new machines is currently not in the state’s capital budget.96 Without state funding, wealthier counties with the funding to updates or replace their machines will have an advantage over counties with fewer resources.97

c. Franklin County has addressed previous concerns about long lines and voting machine shortages by expanding the number of machines from 2,800 in 2004 to 4,735 in 2018.98 These machines also include a voter-verifiable paper trail.99

d. In addition to increasing the number of voting machines to address problems with long lines, some counties have moved from a precinct based voting system to a location based voting system, allowing voters to report to any location in their precinct.100

e. The use of electronic poll books, allowing voters to sign in at any table (rather than requiring them to sign in at the table corresponding to their last name), has also helped to reduce lines at polling sites.101

f. While the integrated use of technology has largely been well received as a positive solution to several voting challenges, a tension exists in balancing the use of such technology with security concerns, economic limitations, and public education.

10. Districting

a. Panelists expressed concern about gerrymandering in Ohio. In the current redistricting plan, the state’s 11th congressional district is 80% Democratic and 52% African American. One panelist suggested that, “Race was almost certainly the predominant factor in drawing this district and its boundaries almost certainly could not be defended as necessary under the Voting Rights Act.”

b. Ohio will place a bipartisan measure on the ballot in the spring of 2018 that would reform the process for drawing the state’s congressional districts.

11. Election security

a. Testimony indicated that there is little evidence of voter fraud generally, and noncitizens voting in U.S. elections specifically.

b. It is difficult to impose proof-of-citizenship requirements related to voting because “we don’t have a national system for determining with precision who is and is not a citizen.” Courts have historically not supported laws that treat natural born and naturalized citizens differently for the purposes of voting.

c. At least two panelists noted significant risk of foreign nationals and foreign powers interfering with U.S. elections generally and in Ohio specifically.

d. One panelist recommended hiring a dedicated cyber security director at the Secretary of State’s office, advised by a bipartisan council of security experts.

e. Electronic voting machines in Ohio contain a paper trail for auditing purposes.\footnote{Turcer Testimony, 2018 Transcript I, p. 9 lines 24-35.} However, one panelist noted that poll workers do not always show the paper trail to voters for verification.\footnote{Ibid, p. 11 lines 29-36.} Paper ballots were noted as more secure and more economical than electronic.\footnote{Clyde Testimony, 2018 Transcript II, p. 16 lines 9-16.}

f. While audits currently exist to ensure that vote tabulation is accurate in Ohio, these audits are not required under state law.\footnote{Ibid, p. 16 lines 17-21.} Random, external audits, not conducted by the Secretary of State or a nonpartisan office, are important to ensure fair and reliable outcomes, and to increase public confidence so that citizens will vote.\footnote{Turcer Testimony, 2006 Transcript, p. 39.}

g. Voting security and equipment maintenance is currently the responsibility of the administering county.

   i. In Franklin County security measures include not connecting voting machines to the internet; locking machines and sealing them with tamper evident seals; and holding live ballots under double lock and key at the Board of Elections.\footnote{Leonard Testimony, 2018 Transcript II, p. 15 lines 10-36.}

   ii. Voter registration information is sent to the Secretary of State over the internet and could potentially be susceptible to cyber-attack.\footnote{Ibid.} In Franklin County, the Board of Elections maintains duplicate records.\footnote{Ibid.} The county also collaborates with the Department of Homeland Security for cyber security efforts.\footnote{Ibid.}

12. Voter Intimidation

   a. The Committee heard testimony that in 2012 intimidating billboards warning of jail time and large fines for voting offenses were predominantly placed in African American neighborhoods.\footnote{Clyde Testimony, 2018 Transcript II, p. 9 lines 3-5; Clyde 2018 Testimony, Panelist Presentations II, Slide 11. Available at Appendix E.}
b. In 2016, there were reports of men riding around in pickup trucks at the polls threatening voters in Summit County Ohio. One panelist noted that harassment at the polls is prohibited under state and federal law; however, “harassment” is not defined.

13. Language Access

a. Section 203 of the Voting Rights Act requires that certain jurisdictions provide all election materials that are available in English in the applicable minority language as well. This includes registration or voting notices, forms, instructions, assistance, ballots, and other materials.

b. Currently there are no jurisdictions covered under Section 203 in Ohio. However, the Committee heard testimony that Franklin County may be nearing the federal threshold for coverage in Spanish and Somali in some precincts, and should be preparing multilingual voting materials accordingly.

c. The Franklin County Board of Elections has one Somali employee who is able to assist Somali voters.

14. Partisanship: The Committee heard significant testimony about the detrimental effect of partisan infighting in the U.S. election system and voter participation. Negative campaign ads and partisan infighting discourage voters from participating.

Recommendations

Among their duties, advisory committees of the Commission are authorized to advise the Agency (1) concerning matters related to discrimination or a denial of equal protection of the laws under the Constitution and the effect of the laws and policies of the Federal Government with respect to equal protection of the laws, and (2) upon matters of mutual concern in the preparation of reports of the Commission to the President and the Congress. In keeping with these responsibilities, and in light of the testimony heard on this topic, the Ohio Advisory Committee submits the following recommendations to the Commission. The Committee recommends that the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights consider these findings and recommendations in their 2018 Statutory Enforcement Report to Congress and the President.

1. As part of their 2018 statutory enforcement report on voting rights, the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights should:
   a. Review available data regarding the (in)frequency of voter fraud generally and noncitizen voting specifically, and promote and disseminate accurate information about the (in)frequency of these crimes.

2. The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights should issue the following formal recommendations to the Ohio Governor and Legislature:
   a. Remove current requirements and prohibit future requirements resulting in the discarding of otherwise legitimate provisional and absentee ballots for trivial errors such as writing legibly in cursive rather than in print, omitting a zip code from an otherwise complete address, or missing a digit in a social security number.
   b. Expand opportunities for early and absentee voting, including on weekends and evenings; resist efforts to curtail early voting especially for partisan or racial advantage; and establish early voting centers on the basis of population served, rather than limiting centers to one per county.
   c. Revisit state legislation prohibiting harassment and voter intimidation at the polls; ensure appropriate enforcement to protect voters and clarify definitions of prohibited behaviors.
   d. In collaboration with the disability rights community, establish an alternative identification verification option for individuals with disabilities who are unable to produce matching signature verification.

3. The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights should issue the following formal recommendations to the Ohio Office of the Secretary of State:
   a. Increase public awareness and education campaigns for voters, particularly in the areas of ID requirements, early and absentee voting opportunities, and any areas of recent election law change.

b. In conjunction with local advocates and the disability rights community, conduct an assessment of the voting process in Ohio to ensure: (1) all aspects are accessible; and (2) effective training is provided to all election officials and poll workers about the rights of people with disabilities and how to provide an accessible voting experience. Where possible, a disability liaison should be assigned to each polling location.

c. Encourage jurisdictions that have a substantial non-English speaking population to begin expanding multilingual voting materials and supports, even if they do not yet meet the federal threshold for required language accessibility.

d. Prohibit the discarding of otherwise legitimate ballots for trivial errors such as writing legibly in cursive rather than in print, omitting a zip code from an otherwise complete address, or missing a digit in a social security number; and issue and enforce consistent guidelines such that all counties apply the same standards in verifying and counting ballots.

e. Hire a dedicated cyber security director advised by a bipartisan council of security experts, election officials, and voter advocates to address concerns regarding foreign interference with electronic voting records.

f. Train poll workers to encourage voters using electronic polling machines to verify their ballots on the corresponding paper trail.

g. Allow Boards of Elections the broadest leeway possible to verify and count absentee and provisional ballots; and refrain from restricting applicable verification sources.

h. Take steps to ensure voting officials and their staffs remain nonpartisan in their approach to voting rights and voting administration.

4. The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights should issue the following formal recommendation to the Ohio Department of Rehabilitation and Correction:

   a. Provide universal and systemic notification of the right to vote to people with felony convictions upon their release from prison.

5. The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights should make all other recommendations and requests of the appropriate public officials to address and correct the findings in this memorandum to ensure voter enfranchisement.

CIVIL RIGHTS COMMITTEE TO ASSESS VOTING RIGHTS PROGRESS
"Ohio’s Preparedness for the 2006 Elections"

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

The Ohio Advisory Committee to the United States Commission on Civil Rights will convene a briefing on Thursday, March 16, 2006, from 1:15 p.m. to 5:15 p.m. and on Friday, March 17, 2006, from 9:30 a.m. to 1:00 p.m., at the Ohio Civil Rights Commission, 1111 E. Broad St., Columbus, OH. The purpose is to find facts and assess the current state of voting access in the state.

In light of recent federal and state legislation, including the Help America Vote Act and Ohio House Bill 3, the Ohio Advisory Committee voted to hear testimony from experts about how these statutes will improve voter access, and the manner in which the statutes have been or will be implemented. The Committee also expects to hear testimony regarding other aspects of voting access in Ohio. Panelists include State Sen. Jeff Jacobson, Franklin County Board of Elections Director Matthew Damschroder, Common Cause Ohio Executive Director Sam Gresham, and Moritz College of Law Professor Daniel Tokaji. A full agenda is attached.

The Chairman of the Ohio Advisory Committee, Lynwood Battle of Cincinnati, will introduce the presenters and moderate the panels. Members of the Ohio Advisory Committee include former U.S. Attorney Sharon Zealey, Ohio Civil Rights Commission Chairman Aaron Wheeler, and Toledo College of Law Professor David Harris. A full list of members is attached. All members will engage the presenters in a question and answer session at the end of each panel. In addition, an open session is scheduled at the end of each day of testimony: 4:45 p.m. on Thursday and 12:30 p.m. on Friday.

As directed by Congress, the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights has established committees in the 50 U.S states and the District of Columbia, comprised of volunteer citizens who advise the Commission on state-level civil rights issues.

PROCEDINGS

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: I have a brief opening statement just to convene us officially, and then we'll go right into our first introduction to our panel.

This meeting of the Ohio Advisory Committee for the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights shall come to order.

For the benefit of those of you in the audience I won't introduce myself and my colleagues, because you just heard that as we went around, those of you who came in, so I won't repeat that.

Also present with us today are David Mussatt, Civil Rights Analyst from the Midwestern Regional Office in Chicago. And Carolyn Allen, who is the administrative assistant.

Not with us is the director of the Midwestern Regional Office, Connie Davis, who sends her regrets. And also is very tuned into what we do all the time and with her constant support.

I'd like to also express my appreciation on behalf of the Advisory Committee to Michael Payton, the Executive Director of the Ohio Civil Rights Commission.

And our friend and fellow committee member,

Pastor Aaron Wheeler, who chairs the Commission.

We greatly appreciate, as always, their willingness to host this meeting and admire the hard work that they continue to do themselves, and also their staff in coordinating the meeting logistics with our logistical staff, our regional staff.

We're here today to conduct for the purposes of gathering -- conduct a briefing for the purpose of gathering information on voting access in Ohio.

And in addition to studying voting issues in the state, the jurisdiction of this committee also includes discrimination or the denial of equal protection of the laws because of race, color, religion, age, sex, disability or national origin, or in the administration of justice.

Information that relates to the topic of the meeting will be especially helpful to this Advisory Committee.

Proceedings of this meeting, which are being recorded by a public stenographer, Cheryl Edwards, will be sent to the Commission for its advice and consideration.

And the Advisory Committee may also decide to investigate this subject further and issue a report at a later date on the topic.
At the outset I want to remind every one present of the ground rules. This is a public meeting open to the media and the general public.

We have a very full schedule of people who will be making presentations within a very limited time that we have available.

The time allotted for each presentation must be rather strictly adhered to. This will include a presentation by each participant, followed by questions from committee members.

And to accommodate those persons who have not been invited, but wish to make statements, we’ve scheduled an open period today at 4:45, and tomorrow at 12:30.

Anyone wishing to make a statement during the period should contact David Mussatt for that scheduling.

Written statements may be submitted to committee members or staff here today, or by mail to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights at 55 West Monroe Street, Suite 410, Chicago, Illinois.

And the record of this meeting will close on April 1st.

Though some of the statements made today may be controversial, we want to ensure that all invited guests do not defame or degrade any person or any organization.

In order to ensure that all aspects of the issues are presented, knowledgeable persons with a wide variety of experience and viewpoints have been invited to share information with us.

Any person or any organization that feels that he
--- that they have been defamed or degraded by statements made in these proceedings should contact our staff during the meeting so that we can provide a chance for public response.

Alternately, such persons or organizations can file written statements for inclusion in the proceedings.

I urge all persons making presentations to be judicious in their statements. The Advisory Committee does appreciate the willingness of all participants to share their views and experiences with this committee.

And with that we will move to our guests and panelists.

Panel No. 1, beginning with Daniel Tokaji from the Moritz College of Law. Followed by Paul Moke, from Wilmington College. And last, Catherine Turcer, of the Ohio Citizens Action.

Mr. Tokaji.

MR. TOKAJI: Mr. Chairman, thank you very much for having me today. And thanks to all the members of the committee for having me here today.

My name is Dan Tokaji. I'm an Assistant Professor of Law at the Ohio State University's Moritz College of Law. I am also the Associate Director of Elections Law, at the Moritz Program at the law school.

My main goal today, because I know you're going to be hearing a lot of speakers, and I know that there are a whole lot of issues pertaining to voting rights in Ohio to discuss today.

My main goal is to try to provide some kind of structure by which you can take in information and analyze these issues around the various problems that have emerged in Ohio's past elections, especially the 2004 elections. As well as those that we can expect to arise in the future, particularly as the result of some significant changes in both federal law and state law.

What I'd like to start by doing is going through a list of issues that emerged, and in fact that resulted in litigation during the 2004 election.

Next to talk about some of the changes in federal law that will be coming into play as a result of deadlines in Help America Vote Act that Ohio will be required to meet in these elections season, the 2006 election season.

And, finally, to talk a bit about something that I'm sure is likely to be a focus of attention for several of the speakers today, the new changes to state law which have just recently been enacted by the Ohio legislature, as a part of Bill Sub H.B. 3, which makes quite a number of changes, some of which I'll address in my remarks today.

In providing this information, and I will discuss a lot of problems that I think have serious voting rights implications in past elections. I want to do my best to highlight those problems without being an alarmist.

I think these are problems that require serious attention. I'm very concerned especially about some of the aspects of H.B. 3 that I think are likely to cause problems for voters, as well as for poll workers and election officials in its first implementation this coming year.

And I think what we all need to do is sit down and think intelligently, carefully about these issues and what we can do to make things better, including what we can do for the voters about some of the new issues and obstacles, frankly, that are likely to arise in the upcoming election.

Let me start by giving an overview of the major issues of contention when it comes to voting rights that emerged in the 2004 location.

And I break these down into seven major categories. In each of these categories we did see litigation before, during, and in some cases after the 2004 election.

I'm going to give a very brief overview here. I brought with me some copies of something I've written on the subject, which will give a more detailed explanation of these issues, I'd be happy to make these available to the commission and any members of the commission who would like one.

So seven issues that emerged in the 2004 election: The first and the one that of course received the greatest attention in the wake of the 2000 election was voting machines, voting technology.

Approximately 70 percent of Ohio's voters used pre-scored punch card voting machines in the 2000 election. This is the same kind of hanging chad device that resulted in so many problems in Florida in 2000.

Social science evidence since then has demonstrated that this type of technology results in more lost votes, so-called residual votes, under votes and over votes than other kinds of voting machines.

It has an especially negative impact on people of lower education levels, and tends to have a greater impact on -- a greater negative impact that is on people of color.

All in all, in the 2004 election, as I mentioned, the vast majority, 70 percent or so of Ohio citizens were still using this kind of technology, even though many other states have made the transition to more reliable voting equipment.

My estimate is somewhere in the neighborhood of 40- to 55,000 votes were lost as a result of the use of this. Not enough by itself to have affected the result of the election, given the approximately 119,000 vote margin, as between Bush and Kerry in the State of Ohio.

But it can easily be seen how in a closer election, as was the case in Florida four years ago, this could have been determinative.

Now, we're right now in the midst of a transition to newer voting technology. And there have been a great deal of concerns raised about that new voting technology, especially electronic voting machines.

Where this is -- this is one of the areas I'll talk a bit about later, where HAVA made significant changes to which the State of Ohio has to adapt.

Second issue, registration. We had a lot of controversy about registration forms, what forms would and wouldn't be accepted in the 2004 election.

The one that probably got the most attention was an initial decision by the Secretary of State's office to refuse to accept forms that were on paper weight less than 80 pounds, very heavy stock paper weight, something like the cover -- the cover of this booklet I have in front of me, as opposed to the ordinary paper that we use.

That decision ultimately was rescinded.
fortunately, in my opinion, but is not clear whether there were registration forms that were denied as a result of that, and thus people who were not allowed to vote.

Also issues in the election, which I won't discuss in detail here, had to do with the treatment of registration forms, which were incompletely filled, either because a particular box was not checked off, or because Social Security numbers or driver's license numbers weren't -- weren't included.

Third issue, and this was a big one, provisional voting. The most controversial issue, and here as in many other states, was probably the Secretary of State's decision to reject provisional ballots entirely if they were not cast in the correct precincts.

There was -- there was litigation on this subject in which the Secretary of State's office ultimately prevailed.
Federal Court of the Sixth Circuit concluding that the state was not required to accept provisional ballots that were cast in the so-called wrong precinct.

And there were a number of provisional ballots not counted. I'm not sure that we have a precise number for this, but we do know there were quite a few that were not counted as a result of people mistakenly going to the wrong precinct and casting a provisional ballot there.
The fourth issue, ID requirement. This is an area in which there's actually been a change in law since 2004. But in 2004 for the first time the Help America Vote Act's ID requirements were in place, applicable to first time voters, who registered by mail on or after January 1st, 2003.

There were issues regarding what to do with votes cast by people who don't have the proper ID at the polling place in this election.

As well as with what kinds of identification will be considered acceptable for those voters who were affected by this requirement.

The fifth issue, challenges to voter elevator eligibility. There were two kinds of challenges that were at issue in the 2004 election, pre-election challenges and Election Day challenges.

As for the pre-Election Day challenges there were some 35,000 voters who were challenged by the Republican Party prior to the election that was subsequently narrowed to 23,000, but under the somewhat cumbersome procedures then required by Ohio election law, these folks would have been required to attend mass hearings to assess their eligibility. That was enjoined by a Federal court.

There was also litigation regarding Election Day challenges, where party representatives have the ability to challenge voters' qualifications on that day.

I won't go through the long detailed story, but there were actually four court orders issued against Ohio's Election Day challenge procedures, all four of which were ultimately reversed on appeal.

Sixth issue, polling place operations. In some places, especially right here in Franklin County, as well as Knox County, we had extremely long lines at the polling place on Election Day, some voters waited three or four hours, or in Knox County even more to cast their vote.

I think there are a lot of complicated reasons for it, but I hope we can prove that those kinds of lines are simply unacceptable in a democracy that is advanced, or is supposed to be advanced.

Another issue regarding polling place operations, disability access. According to an Election Day survey conducted for the Election Assistance Commission, only about 76 percent of polling places were physically accessible to people with disabilities, and I think that's probably a high end estimate, which means that there were at least 1500 that were not.

I'd also note that in that survey data was not even reported back by the state on accessible voting technology for visually impaired people. But I suspect it would be a very... low number if data had been reported back by the state insofar as access to blind voters goes.

The seventh and final issue is recounts and contests. Now, fortunately the margin was wide enough there was not a recount requested by the losing presidential candidate, but there might have been some serious issues having to do with recounts along the lines of those we saw in Florida's 2000 election, as well as the contests, including a question as to whether the entire process could have been completed by the so called Safe Harbor Day, the date by which all litigation and controversies over elections are required to be completed as a result of -- under federal law, in order for that state's electorates to be counted according to the voters' intent.

Now, having outlined those seven issues I also want to move now to some of the changes, and they are very significant that are required by federal and state law.

We've got three big deadlines that are upon us now in 2006 as a result of the Help America Vote Act.

The first deadline has to do with the replacement of punch card and lever voting machines. As I mentioned 70 percent of voters in 2004 used punch card machines, approximately 70 percent.

New technology has to be in place in all of those jurisdictions by the 2006 election. That's because Ohio was one of the 30 states that accepted money under Title I of the Help America Vote Act, which the state obligated itself to replace that technology.

The second requirement that comes into play, which is under the Help America Vote Act is the Disability Access requirement.

As of this election season, the 2006 election season, there must be at least one unit at each polling place that is accessible to people with disabilities, including visually impaired voters.

And those voting machines have to ensure privacy and independence for disabled voters. I'm hopeful, but not certain that that requirement will be complied with in this election.

One of the complicating issues has been the state's requirement that electronic voting machines generate voter verifiable paper audit trails. I know that's been a very controversial issue, it's one that I try to avoid today.

But that requirement has -- has -- let me put it as neutrally as I can, created some challenges in terms of complying with HAVA's disability access requirement in Ohio as well as many other states.

The third big requirement that comes into play, this may be the least noticed one, but I think it's probably the most significant one.

The statewide voter registration data base, this is a requirement of HAVA to come into play this year in all states. Every state has to have a statewide registration list that's accessible by election officials in all of the counties.

A lot of attention over the past six years has been given to voting machines, but a study by Cal Tech and MIT actually found registration issues were probably a bigger source of lost votes in the 2000 election, than were voting machines.

So the idea behind this requirement of HAVA's statewide data base requirement is to improve our list. I have to say that I'm very worried that at least in the short term this requirement may have the opposite effect.

That there are going to be some problems and some voters in particular who go to the polling place on Election Day in 2006 and find their names aren't on the list due to glitches in the statewide registration data base.

Now, there are some -- one of my big pet peeves, I have to say, about Ohio's election system, since I've been studying it over the past three or four years, has been the lack of publicly available information or the lack of transparency into the election system and statewide registration data bases, and exactly how much progress the state and local government's are making in this area.
And it's been one of the areas in which I -- I think frankly there's been a lack of transparency. I do think the Secretary of State's office, to its credit, has made some improvements in this area recently.

They've improved their web site, which for many people is a portal into seeing how they can conduct their operations. But I will have to say -- I realize I'm reaching the end of my time, but I'll cut it short.

MS. TURCER: Go ahead.

MR. TOKAJI: Okay. There is some information that's now available on the Secretary of State's web site about the implementation of a statewide registration data base, but I frankly just have not been able to find out enough about what the state has been doing to make an informed judgement about how well the state's statewide registration data base is going to work in 2006. And I hope that this is something that this committee is able to do some inquiry into.

Finally let me talk a bit about H.B. 3. This is the state law that was enacted just this year, we'll be making major changes to the state's election system.

I think there are some positive things in the bill. There are also some things that I think are going to cause some serious difficulties for voters, as well as for poll workers and election officials.
You're going to be hearing more about this I'm quite confident from other speakers, so I'm not going to talk about all aspects of this 400 some page bill.

I want to focus on three areas that are areas of particular concern to me, and then I'd encourage this committee to consider looking into.

One of them is the ID requirement that's newly enacted as part of this bill. Under this requirement, in order to cast a regular ballot, voters must show either state issued photo ID, a photo military ID, or some sort of documents with the voters name and current address, such as utility bill, or government document showing the voter's name and current address.

If -- if you don't have one of those documents you can cast a provisional ballot, if you either provide the last four digits of your Social Security number, or sign an affidavit saying that you don't have any of these documents, or don't have any of these things.

I think there is -- the provisions regarding the circumstances under which provisional ballots get counted are extremely complicated.

I'm a lawyer who specializes in this area and I'm hard pressed to understand the details of this bill. I frankly shutter to think -- that may be too strong a phrase, but I'm quite concerned about what's going to happen.

This has to get implemented by poll workers and elections officials, are they going to understand the details of this law, are we going to see inconsistencies across counties as to how provisional ballots get counted.

I think one thing that I'd be quite confident of is that we're going to see a whole lot more provisional ballots cast in 2006 and subsequent Ohio elections.

More people under this bill are going to be channeled into the provisional ballot pathway, as opposed to casting regular ballots.

When you have more provisional ballots, what that means is there are going to be more things for parties to fight over, there's going to be more risk of inconsistencies as between counties.

And there is less likelihood that the results of elections will be actually finally determined on election night.
In other words, it's quite likely that we're going to see Bush versus Gore type controversies spilling past Election Day, because of the increased number of provisional ballots.

A second major challenge -- change, has to do with challenges to voter eligibility. I think there is a good change here, which is the elimination of partisan -- that is party appointed challengers, but challenges by poll workers or election judges as they are sometimes called are still allowed.

One provision I'm especially worried about is one that allows for voters whose eligibility is challenged on the grounds of citizenship to be required to produce naturalization papers if they are naturalized citizens.

Imagine a 75 year old grandmother immigrated from China many years ago who has voted successfully for many years being asked to show her naturalization papers at the polling place.

Some of these voters may have lost or misplaced naturalization papers. They do have some time after the election within which they can bring them in.

But I'm very worried that this is going to provide a recipe for racial and ethnic profiling at the polling place.

Third big change has to do with recounts and contests with post election procedures. The law raises the fee for recounts from 10 to $15 per precinct.

I personally think that that's a reasonable change given that the amount had been kept to $10 for quite sometime. I realize there may be differences of opinion on that issue, but I think that's a reasonable change.

I am worried about the elimination of contests for federal elections. Under H.B. 3 a contest can no longer be brought if one disagrees with the election results.

For example, because one thinks that fraudulent or unregistered voters have cast ballots in this election, or if there were some other kind of cheating or malfeasance. We saw this for example in Washington, highly contested Washington gubernatorial race where a number of voters were alleged to have cast votes who were not in fact eligible.

There are no longer any state contest provisions for federal elections, that is United States House or U.S.
Senate or presidential elections.

Now, what the law says is that, well, the federal provisions regarding contests for control, problem is there aren't any, at least there aren't any that allow for a judicial resolution of contests. I suppose one could go directly to Congress in a contested house or Senate race.

But I'm very concerned that this is going to lessen rather than increase the reliability of election results, and therefore public confidence in elections.

I've said plenty, and I appreciate your taking the time to listen to me.

I want to close by summarizing what I think the big issues to look out for in 2006 are, changes in voting technology; statewide voter registration data base; the implementation of the ID requirement; challenges to voter eligibility; and elimination of contests in federal elections. These are all issues that could have serious voting rights implications. And I'm pleased that this committee is here taking testimony on these and other issues. Thank you so much for having me.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Mr. Moke.

MR. MOKE: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and members of the committee. My name is Paul Moke, I'm a Professor of Social and Political Studies at Wilmington College in Wilmington, Ohio. Wilmington is a small college associated with the Society of France, which is Quakers. I'm the author of two published articles on voting rights in Ohio. And have joined Dan Tokaji in litigation involving punch card ballots in Ohio on behalf of the American Civil Liberties Union, and that legal action, which is known as Stewart versus Blackwell, is currently on appeal in the Sixth Circuit in Cincinnati. This afternoon I'd like to briefly examine three aspects of voting reforms in Ohio that may prove problematic in the coming months. And the three aspects that I want to look at in a little bit of detail with you involved first, voting technology.
Second, the racial gap in lost votes. And, third, the implications of these two problems for democracy in Ohio more generally.

Before I launch into these three issues I want to put all three into some broader context.

First, Ohio is a battle ground state. And it did not emerge as a battleground politically just in the 2004 presidential election.

In fact, since the Civil War, only one presidential candidate has one the White House without winning Ohio.

And to the benefit of those who aren't historians that one person was John F. Kennedy in 1960.

So to the voters of this state, to the candidates themselves, and to an anxious nation, maintaining the fairness of elections in Ohio is of the utmost importance.

But elections in Ohio may be headed for a stormy future, and the dynamics of this storm aren't hard to understand.

First, nearly every county in Ohio will be using new voting technology in 2006.

Second, every voter in the November election will be subject to a new set of more restrictive requirements for voting that arise out of the House Bill 3 reforms.
And, third, the differences in voting outcomes between the two parties have been so narrow in high profile contests in recent years in Ohio that the margin of victory may be within the so-called margin of litigation, prompting the parties to take these issues to court.

Taken together these dynamics are putting great responsibilities on the shoulders of poll workers and local election officials.

These officials are going to need to educate voters about how to use the new equipment. And there is a definite learning curve both for the officials, for the poll workers, and for the voters about how to use the new equipment.

Poll workers are going to have to be trained in how to set up the equipment; how to run it at the polls; and additionally on top of that they are going to have to implement the 400 pages of new reforms that's under House Bill 3.

Among those, as Dan indicated, are the new voter ID requirements, and new rules concerning provisional ballots. And let me just take a minute to amplify briefly on what Dan had to say about those two issues.

First, with respect to voter ID, we need to be clear that the voter ID concerns not just the identity of the would be voter, but it also includes a current address requirement.
And that current address needs to square with the information in the registration material, such that if a voter moves within a precinct and still goes to the proper precinct to vote, but uses an ID that has the old address, that voter will not comply with the new rule.

Second, as to provisional ballots, one of the big and hotly disputed issues in the 2004 election in court concerned the question of what is the definition of the word jurisdiction in the federal Help America Vote Act as it applies to Ohio.

Specifically, the question was the voter has to vote in the proper jurisdiction, but what does that mean? Does it mean the State of Ohio? Does it mean the county? Does it mean the precinct?

In House Bill 3, the General Assembly defined the word "jurisdiction" in the most narrow way it could have. Meaning that the voter has to vote in the proper precinct, or he or she will be casting an invalid vote.

So the polling workers are going to have to implement these somewhat specific and complex rules at the polling place.

Now, these reforms are requiring a lot of new work for poll workers at precisely the time when well trained and capable poll workers are becoming increasingly difficult to
The penalty for non-compliance with these rules for would be voters is utter disenfranchisement. And as others have argued for people of color, for the disabled, for the elderly, and for the poor, these costs may be particularly severe.

Now, with respect to voting technology, as Dan has indicated, for the past 15 years voters in Ohio have used three primary voting systems. The punch card system, which was the predominant system. The optical scan system, which works like an SAT exam, where you darken what you want in the way of your choice. And the first generation of the electronic touch system, which were used here in Franklin County.

The Secretary of State has publicly acknowledged that these three systems have very different error rates. Some systems were more prone to over-voting than others. And the difference was that those systems gave voters a warning when they were making mistakes and gave them a chance to fix what was wrong with the ballot. Whereas, other systems like the punch card system did not have that capacity. And so the punch card system gave rise to approximately three times more over votes than under votes than the other systems did.
To its credit Ohio, like other states in the country, are using federal money to replace these antiquated systems.

But according to the latest information available on the Secretary of State's website, there are eight counties in Ohio that are falling behind in terms of the implementation of this new equipment.

These eight counties have been referred to as staging counties by the Secretary, meaning I suspect that there should have been a process of getting us up to speed, and they are behind everyone else.

The three counties are Allen, which is the Lima area; Franklin; Hamilton; Licking, Madison, Mahoning over in Youngstown; Summit; and Williams County up in the northwest corner of Ohio.

And these eight counties include some of the most populous areas of the state.

At this juncture we don't know if those counties are going to have their systems up and running fully by the primary on May the 2nd, but we do know to the extent that they are behind that makes it more difficult for them to do the public education function that needs to take place prior to the primary.

The second issue that I want to address with you concerns the racial gap in lost votes, the title of my most recent paper.

Voters experience difficulties with the election process, and statistically persons of color are more likely to encounter problems with registration, problems with voter identification, problems with the use of voting technology, and problems with the overall voting process. And this is what political scientists have referred to as the racial gap in lost votes.

In my study of the 2000 Presidential election here in Ohio, I zeroed in on three counties; Hamilton, Montgomery and Summit, and compared over vote rates for inner city precincts that were predominantly black with other precincts that were predominantly white.

And the data showed unequivocally that there were seven to nine times more over votes cast in the inner city precincts of those three Ohio cities than in the largely white precincts.

And these problems are not merely historical remnants. According to a survey that was just released by the Elections Assistance Commission, the Federal EAC, following the 2004 election there were substantial disparities based on race, language and class, across a broad array of nuts and bolts aspects of elections.
Specifically, the Elections Assistance Commission study showed that jurisdictions that had low levels of education and income, had higher levels of inactive voting -- voter registration, lower levels of voter turnout, higher numbers of provisional ballots cast, higher levels of over votes, higher levels of under votes.

And most importantly for me, lower levels of voting poll workers per polling place in these areas, compared to other parts of the state.

So the very people who are most likely to encounter the most problems at the polling place are voting in places where they don't have the assistance they need. And that is troubling.

These finds highlight the importance of local officials in the elections process. And it underscores for me the need to reform our voting system so that each one of the precincts, each of the over 11,000 precincts in this state is similarly situated with respect to trained poll workers and competent people to help voters vote.

Finally, let me just address a few comments with respect to the third issue, which concerns how do we get a neutral process for elections administration in Ohio, and what does this mean for democracy.

In an influential book entitled Democracy and Distrust, the late Professor John Hart Ely, was former dean of Stanford Law School, discussed the constitutional problem of conflict between in-groups and out-groups when it comes to political participation.

And the problem as Ely saw it was that when the political party that's in control makes rules for elections that systematically benefit its own side, then courts have a responsibility to step in and use the power of judicial review to create an even playing field.

And since the beginning of our Republic the political parties have played games with political processes and set up the process to benefit themselves.

Think back to American history in terms of the Jackson era and the spoil system, or even the erection of Jim Crow laws in the south, again motivated by groups that were trying to structure the process in their favor.

This may be an inevitable part of the human condition, but as the struggles in the last 15 years say over the motor voter law or partisan gerrymandering or even House Bill 3 show democracy itself may become the loser.

Let's take a look just briefly at the motor voter bill from the early '90s and compare it with House Bill 3. Both of these laws were passed in circumstances of great partisan conflict.
It was virtually all Republicans voting one way and all Democrats voting the other way, both in the U.S. Congress and the Ohio General Assembly.

The goal of the motor voter bill was to minimize barriers to political participation and enfranchise millions of Americans, largely lower class people and people of color who weren't registered.

And although it facilitated greater levels of registration on the part of these groups, the bill was largely disappointing in the sense that it didn't lead to large numbers of new actual voters at the polling place.

But in the case of H.B. 3 the goal was to minimize voting fraud and achieve finality in the voting process, in ways that Dan has explained to us.

But in research by the Ohio League of Women Voters shows that the predicate for House Bill 3, which was avoiding fraud in the voting process, is simply not there.

Out of the over nine million votes cast in the 2002 and 2004 elections in Ohio collectively, in only four cases, that's four cases out of over nine million, did the local board of elections and county prosecutors decide to bring legal actions for voter fraud, four cases out of nine million.

It's difficult to avoid the conclusion, any other conclusion than that the underlying motivation for House
Bill 3 was vote suppression, and in that sense I find it troubling.

It's similar to what's going on with partisan gerrymandering in Ohio and elsewhere in the country where legislators are choosing their own constituents, rather than vice-versa.

In conclusion, let me just say that one of the central teachings of American political history is that today's in-group, tomorrow will become an out-group.

And it's in the long term best interest of political parties to strike compromises on this issue, to maintain fairness and impartiality when it comes to voting, but when the party cannot or will not do this, then it's incumbent upon the court to step in as referees of the political process to guaranteeing neutrality and fairness.

And it's in that sense that this Advisory Committee and the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights have an important role to play in fact finding and investigation.

I thank you.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Thank you. Ms. Turcer.

MS. TURCER: Hello everybody, I'm Catherine Turcer, I'm with a group called Ohio Citizens Action.

And I suspect that like many voters I thought about election administration, you know, two times a year when it came time to go to the Primary poll and when it came time for the General Election.

I didn't think a lot about it before Election 2000, I was really focused on money and politics and campaign finance reform.

And when I thought about civil liberties in this context I was really thinking about redistricting and the stacking of districts.

And I thought about the color of money and, you know, meaning if the white wealthy are the biggest contributors what does this mean for social policy.

But the chad provided a wonderful opportunity, and, you know, it was an opportunity to say, well, wait a second, we voters really need to start thinking, are these systems accountable, does my vote count. Do the votes of my neighbors count and what do we actually need to do to improve the system.

What are the responsibilities of the Secretary of State? What are the responsibilities of poll workers? What are my responsibilities as a voter?

So if we think about the past few years this has been a wonderful opportunity for a whole conversation for the entire country and for Ohio to think about, well, what's going on and how do we re-energize the system.
I see this kind of conversation that we're having today as a beginning of re-energizing. Now, so far we've heard some really depressing facts and we do need to prepare for Election 2006 and think about what's happened in this public conversation.

And I'd really like to take a minute to talk about kind of what has happened for the public in this process.

During the implementation of the Help America Vote Act I was invited by the Ohio Secretary of State to serve on the Help America Vote Act State Planning Commission.

The State Planning Commission's goal was much like your goal, you -- you get together and listen to testimony about what possible problems are, how we should actually -- how should the state actually implement HAVA. What about how should money be extended? What are the resources that voters need? What about voter education?

Once again very exciting, right?

But unfortunately what happened is that it became an area for people to explain what their issues were. For example, the League of Women Voters came and they really talked about the need for better voter education, better polling education.

They talked a lot about the need for appropriate auditing. So to make sure that the voting apparatus was actually right, and proper auditing systems.

We had wonderful disability advocates that addressed what is -- most of us are able-bodied, what is it like to not be able to get into your polling location.

How long has ADA been around, you know, American Disabilities Act has been around forever, you know. What the heck is going on that people still can't get in to actually vote.

And so this was a wonderful opportunity to talk about what is going on.

However, what happened is, you know, we convened for a few times, we heard the testimony, but it really didn't become as much as you might expect part of the plan.

And as the Help America Vote plan evolved the public did not continue with this process. There was not -- the State Planning Commission did not continue.

So I think as we think about policy development we need to think about where is the public left out of this. If we go back, think about House Bill 3, for example, no one came and testified in favor of voter identification.

No one came and said, hey, you know, I want to see naturalization papers, if somebody looks a little like they might not actually be a citizen. So we need to really bring this back to voters and really assess what's going on.
And one of the things as we think about social policies and policies that are happening in the State of Ohio, we need to think about the legislative process.

Of course this is just one area, but we need to think about the way the bills are just ran through. Now, I'll take for example something that's a little outside of this, but for example yesterday there was an open records bill, something that most of us care a lot about, good open accountable government.

And in this particular case the bill was voted out of committee, little side bars here and there, voters -- the people in the room could actually see what the amendments were, but we couldn't look at the gestalt, where we couldn't look at the whole bill as a package before the committee voted on it, and it was on the house floor that afternoon.

This is also what happened with House Bill 3, where, yes, there was a long period that House Bill 3, the first version was available.

But all of the amendments were really discussed in a private context. In the context that were inside the legislative rooms away from public hearings.

And so as we think about improving the system, and I suspect we'll be making legislative changes in the upcoming years, we need to think about more open government.
And I encourage processes like this where we're having a conversation about how the public gets left out of this.

And also encourage our legislators across the country to slow the train down. Take time to really hear what people think and what voters are concerned about.

I also think that we need to think about the other thing that happened in House Bill 3, which is not something that either of these gentlemen addressed, was it actually -- House Bill 3 removed a provision for systematic random audits of the computerized voting systems.

Now, okay, think about this, how many of you have gone to your computer and you're sitting there and you're typing away and all of a sudden, oh, yeah, it didn't quite work or it's gone, you pushed the wrong button, something went -- computers are inherently buggy they just are.

You want them -- you know you want them to be reliable, but garbage in, garbage out. So there is that whole issue.

We need to have an appropriate auditing system. It's good that it's actually part of the law and not a Secretary of State directive, as the Secretary of State of course is an elected official who should be accountable to the voters of course, but is a partisan official as well.
So, you know, it's one of those things that happened so if we think about the physical barriers to voting, for example, now we need to go beginning in November, since they didn't highlight this, beginning in November 2006 we're going to need to go in with some way to prove who we are, which is an obstacle for the poor, for the elderly.

And seems like most of us sitting at this table, of course we have a driver's license in our wallet or purse, it's somehow hard to imagine that there are folks that don't have a way to prove they are who they are.

But we are special, you know, we are -- we are privileged and it's easy to forget that.

Those are physical barriers. But we need to remember the psychological barrier, which is a barrier, what if my vote just does not count, and does not count because they removed appropriate auditing.

And so as we examine the policies that have been established and we think about Election 2006, we need to really encourage voter education.

For example, bring information to the, you know, the very, you know, everybody we know, we need to let you know as many -- as many ways as we possibly can in the upcoming year, bring information so you can prove who you are.

And then we need to let them know which specific IDs work, because of course you can't use a birth certificate, who here would have assumed a birth certificate.

    I mean something that -- what about a passport, that does not work either. But there are specific ones that they want and specific ones that don't work. So we need to make sure we educate the public as best we can.

    We also need to think about poll worker education. And -- and also we need -- voters will be receiving in the mail part of House Bill 3, including information advising them of their polling location, where their precinct is actually located.

    And also -- and also encourages them, you know, if you know there are any problems it gives a phone number and website and that kind of thing.

    But we need to remember as we think about access most of us have a home computer. Most of us have internet access.

    Once again we have to think about the digital divide. And so we need to think about how we are informing people and have it not just be electronic.

    We need to find ways to actually get out to the citizenry and really let them know what to expect during 2006, which is possibly longer lines, because I need to prove who you are, possibly longer lines because I need to show you how the machine works.

And then finally longer lines because you want to be absolutely sure that you are at the right location, or your vote will not count. And thank you.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Thank you, Ms. Turcer.

And thank all of you.

I'm sure that the committee members will have some questions and I appreciate your testimony.

And with that, Tom Rogers.

MR. ROGERS: I have a question concerning driver ID.

Did any studies determine most people with driver's licenses renew their driver's license every four years, if they have a change of address, make it then.

What percentage of the people move, you'll have these people coming in, these are the privileged people, and what kind of clamoring do you expect, I expect them to say, hey,
I can't vote, because I just moved.

MR. TOKAJI: I do want to clarify one point mentioned in Professor Moke's and my testimony.

For driver's licenses this provision was actually changed at the 11th hour in the bill in a favorable direction.

For driver's licenses voters may cast a regular ballot even if it has an old address, so long as it's a current and valid driver's license.

Now, military ID it's got to have the current address. And if it's documentary identification, for example, utility bill, bank statement, government check, but it's got to have your current address.

I'm not a big fan of H.B. 3 as you can probably tell by my testimony, but this is one aspect of it that was improved for the better at the last minute before it was passed.

MR. ROGERS: Is car registration considered?

MR. TOKAJI: Car registration is not among the list of documentary identification. Let me just double -- let me take that back, it says other government document. So that's not specifically mentioned, but it might be considered by officials and other government documents that might be considered acceptable.

MS. TURCER: The one thing that I would say is that I suspect it may be confusing to poll workers that you would accept the ID, but the address would be incorrect.

Now, one of the reasons that was changed at the last minute had to do with the fact that the DMV does not require you, if you move you're supposed to inform them that you've moved, but you can keep the same ID just as -- even if an address is wrong for four years.
So that was highlighted to the legislature. And so they said, well, then okay, you know, that's fine as long as it's you and the address isn't correct.

But you can see a poll worker thinking this is very peculiar, right. So what I worry about is equal protection kind of thing where one county does one thing, and one precinct does it one way, another one does it a different way.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Others? Yes, Ms. Ramos.

MS. RAMOS: In this question about ID, you mentioned that the military would have an address, did you say that?

MR. TOKAJI: That's the requirement of the law that it has to be military identification that shows the voters' name and current address.

MS. RAMOS: The military does not show it, that's why I find it curious when you say that.

MS. TURCER: No. Actually -- I actually highlighted it.

MS. RAMOS: My other question is I understand what you say about assistance in the polls. I was on the Board of Elections in the '04 election, some of the things you talked about did not happen or happened very rarely, so I kind of get concerned.

You don't have poll workers. Right now people are looking for poll workers for May, you can't find them. Part of that falls with as citizens we are not volunteering to do that.

We're talking about motivation of voters, because you do have training classes, you have training classes for presiding judges and poll workers.

Does not do you any good if you don't have poll workers. What do you motivate them with, higher salary? They are not exactly high paid for 12 hours by the time you divide it up. I don't want to get up at 7:00 in the morning and work till 7:00 at night for what they are getting.

Part of this is the motivation of the citizens.
I was very interested in what you said, you did the motor voter,
it didn't have an impact on the voters themselves.

Again they did it because it was sort of put on them, but the responsibilities comes back to some of this and I don't know how you do that, because obviously some of them weren't paying attention to what happened with the house bill -- nobody showed up, they didn't show up for other things.

Somehow we have to get a little further than that, because what you're talking about are mechanics of the voting system.

And, yeah, there's a lot of problems with it.
The chad system, it just amazes me, because we went through in Green County, and we had very few, we never had problems with it.

I really trust it more than the electronic, we can count them precinct by precinct. You can almost see where the changes are.

You can come down to a precinct and find out what the mistake was. Without verifiable electronic voting all you do is count the same votes over, and that scares me, that scared me from the very beginning.

There is nothing as a recount in electronic unless you have a verifiable paper trail, all you're doing is counting the exact same thing again.

MR. TOKAJI: Well, you've got a verifiable paper trail in Ohio for better or for worse.

I completely agree with your points regarding poll workers, I mean it's a huge problem, not just in Ohio, especially urban areas, but throughout the country we just don't have enough qualified poll workers.

And one of the things I'm really worried about with H.B. 3 is it's going to make life a lot more difficult for poll workers.

What's going to be the unintended consequence of that, these poll workers who are a scarce resource already, are likely to get driven away, because the job is going to become more complicated, more difficult for them.

So I don't have any good -- great suggestions. I think one thing we could consider is an Election Day holiday, which would free up more human resources for people to volunteer at the polls.

A lot of the poll workers that we see are retired people, and thank goodness they are willing to do this. But if we were able to get another larger pool through an Election Day holiday that might get us a more qualified pool, but more additional qualified workers.

MR. MOKE: I think many of your points are well taken and I agree with them. I note that in both the case of the federal HAVA legislation and House Bill 3, buried in the details of both are provisions calling for in one case more college students to get involved, in motivating them financially to serve as poll workers.

And the other case, even high school students. H.B. 3 talks about people 17 and older being able to serve as poll workers.

With respect to one of your other points, just briefly about the punch cards, this is a copy of what the ballot will look like in those counties that have optical scan systems with the E&S model, those are quite numerous in Ohio.

And I don't know if you can see too well, but it's asking you to darken in your preference. Like on the SAT exam. But if voters say do an "x" instead of darkening in or if they circle instead of darkening in, that can lead to some issues.

The other issue that can arise is a stray mark over here on the corner, you notice that this is the code, and this stray mark over here where the computer is reading the code can also lead to the ballot coming back out of the reader.

And so the good news is the ballot will come out of the reader and the voter will be told there is a mistake here. But again poll worker assistance comes into play here, helping them understand exactly what the instructions are and what to do.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Yes, Ms. Zealey.

MS. ZEALEY: I have a couple of questions of the two professors.

With your familiarity with House Bill 3, what notice requirements are there that voters receive notice of their exact polling place prior to the election, that there will be new technology used, and how they might educate themselves on how to use it, and what types of identification are okay and which will not be allowed?

MS. TURCER: There -- there is a requirement for even numbered, you know, even numbered general elections that so would not apply for this primary or next primary or the following -- following general election.

But the voters be sent a card giving their precinct information and giving the, you know, website, precinct information, polling location. Also what congressional district you're in, what legislative races, so that you would know what district you were in.

It does not -- it did not include something that said what the exact things you have to bring to the polls, so that is an issue.

MR. TOKAJI: They fortunately took Catherine's advice on that one. There were a lot of last minutes changes to the bill.

You have to pardon me if it sometimes takes us a little while to look up the specific provisions, so we can provide accurate information.

Catherine is right on the rest, the notice which is to be provided in 60 days, and this is just for federal elections, just so it will just be 2006, just 2008, includes the day of the election, location of the polling place, and a reminder of the identification requirement. So I think that provision is a good one.

MS. ZEALEY: And the reminder of the identification requirement will specify what types of ID are approved?

MR. TOKAJI: Correct.

MS. ZEALEY: Okay.

MR. TOKAJI: This is section 3501.19 of the Ohio Revised Code.

MR. MOKE: One other answer to your question concerns the issue of educating voters concerning the election technology, in several of the counties near where I live, I've been in conversation with voting officials and they are focusing primarily on the primary, in terms of voting education efforts. They have shopping malls, stores. And I was probing them a little bit concerning the fall, exactly what kinds of voter education outreach efforts were planned for the fall election.

And at least at this point it appears that the focus is going to be more on the primary, and less on the fall election, which troubles me because we're looking at turnout rates 35, 30 percent in the primary. And far higher rates, maybe 60, 65 percent in the fall.

So you're dealing with kind of a group of people who won't participate in the primary, but will be voting for the first time on the new equipment in November. And I think we need some outreach for that group, too.

MS. ZEALEY: I have another question, just one quick question.

It seems as though the allocation of voting machines and the allocation of the numbered poll workers is really key, because if you could saturate every polling place with those two things you wouldn't have any lines.

How is that going to be supervised, is there any plan, and is that plan public so that if it's insufficient to provide sufficient protection for voters that it can be challenged prior to 2006 elections?

MR. TOKAJI: This was obviously a huge problem, especially here in Franklin County during the 2004 election, in which we had actually a couple of problems.

One, we didn't have enough voting machines here, period. And those that we had weren't allocated in the most fair and effective possible way.

Now, part of the difficulty -- the inherent difficulty here is predicting how many voters will turn up to each polling place.

And I don't envy the job that boards of elections and directors of elections has to do. I believe you'll have Mr.
Damschroder testifying tomorrow. I'm sure that's one of the questions that you can direct to him.

Broadly speaking to answer your question, it's done on a localized basis. We have boards of elections with equal numbers of Republicans and Democrats on them. And I think the idea behind that is a sound one.

The two parties can keep an eye on each other to make sure that the allocation of voting machines and poll workers among precincts are fair.

Getting back to the point I made to my initial testimony, and one to your questions properly keys into transparency is key that these decisions be made public so that voters who are concerned that the allocation of either people or machines isn't right, have a chance to raise those concerns, and for those concerns to be remediated in advance of the election.

MS. ZEALEY: Thank you.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Ms. Bledsoe, followed up by Mr. Francis.

MS. BLEDSOE: My question is for the disability requirement.

You're saying that there should be one unit of accessibility, what does that look like, apart from accessibility to the location, what should the unit look like?

MR. TOKAJI: I think you're quite right to point out the fact that there's really two distinct kinds of disability access issues when we're talking about the voting process.

The first is the physical access to the polling place itself, which means among other things having ramps and adequate pathways for people in wheel chairs or other assisted devices.

The second really has more to do with other types of disabilities, such as visual impairment, manual dexterity impairments, in some cases cognitive impairments that may limit people's reading ability.

What's most important and what HAVA quite clearly requires there be at least one unit that has an audio component for people visually impaired or have cognitive impairments that hinder their abilities to read, so those people can vote privately and independently without assistance at the polling place.

And most contemporary direct or core electronic voting machines have that capacity. There are also some that have the capacity to provide certain kinds of assistive devices for people with manual dexterity limitations, so-called zip and puff tubes that allow people to vote in that manner.

I don't know when it would be a good thing to inquire into. I'm more optimistic about having the accommodation for people with visual and cognitive impairments, that is audio capacity, than I am with manual dexterity impairments.

I've not been able to find a whole lot of good information about what's going on in Ohio. I think that's a good thing to inquire into with election officials who will be testifying tomorrow.

MR. MOKE: I wanted to add just one other response to Sharon's earlier question, if I may.

I reside in a rural county in Ohio, but last week
I went through several hours of training concerning the new equipment, and I thought I would share with you just briefly how our county is planning to implement the machines in terms of precincts.

They are taking the old punch card machine, the stand, and gutting it, but keeping the same stand and that will have like privacy shields.

And so the voter will take the ballot, fill it out there, and then go to the reader, and there will be one reader per precinct.

So in the past there would have been maybe five photomatic voting machines in the precincts. Now there's just going to be one reader. So there will be a line at the reader.

And then once a ballot is kicked back by the machine due to say an over vote, then the voter is going to have to return back to the first station with the new ballot to correct it and then go to the end of the line.

It is my understanding that there is a formula for the allocation of the voting machines, but again I think Dan's answer is correct, you should probably ask that of the officials testifying here tomorrow exactly what that formula is.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Mr. Francis.

MR. FRANCIS: I think I have more of a statement than question.

I voted Tuesday in the City of Dayton, we had income tax renewal and we voted on these new machines.
Fortunately for us it was an extremely, extremely low turnout for this vote.

But as I entered the polling station every person entering the station, a poll worker had to get up and go with that person to the new machines to show them how to work it.

Now, can you imagine what's going to happen in these primaries and whatnot when you've got hundreds of people waiting to get in at the same time, and everyone of them having to have instructions on how to operate these machines?

They are going to be lined out the door, I guarantee you, unless some training is done, you know, with citizens in various areas, it has to be done.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Comments, panelists?

MR. TOKAJI: Yeah, I think that's a great point and it happens any time you implement new voting equipment you've got to have voter education along with it.
In places in the past that have made the transition, where it's been most successful and best received by the public have been those that did exactly the kind of public education you suggested.

For example, having stations at shopping malls and where people -- places where people regularly go where they can see the new machine, where it's not completely unfamiliar when they go to the polls for the first time. Good point.

MR. MOKE: I agree, you're making a very good and strong point. And just wanted to add that under the original state of Ohio HAVA plan, in the budget there were monies allocated for public education on the new machines.

And I think it would be a good question to ask of Ohio officials tomorrow exactly how much money is there for that process.

I can tell you in my own county just the other day I got a call from the director of our board of elections asking if I knew a college student who could help the Board of Elections staff because they are so overwhelmed getting ready for this primary, and going around to the shopping centers with the equipment in the next month to demonstrate how to use it. So I'm in the process of organizing that.

But I think it just kind of raises the question about resources for that purpose, both now and especially in the CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Reverend Wheeler, followed by Ms. Citrino.

MR. WHEELER: First of all, for the record I was on the Secretary of State's committee along with Ms. Turcer, HAVA committee, so I just want that to be reflected in the record.

And, secondly, we have a lot of homeless people in this state, my concern is how do you handle that situation when they are homeless?

And then No. 2, in that same vain we have many migrant workers, how do you address those issues in the state?

MS. TURCER: It is a significant problem. One of the things that they do allow is the use of an address, let's say you have the Faith Shelter, I'll just give a name, that is the place that -- what is home, home is where you return to.

So if that is a place that you intend to return, the problem is how can I put this, so that you can come up with an address as a homeless person if you're willing to use one of -- whether it's a social services, or homeless shelter so that those are options for somebody who is homeless.

It does provide a problem of course, because what happens, remember when we were talking about the reminding people that, hey, this is your polling location, bring these IDs, these are your districts.

Well, what happens is if that card for example goes to a location and let's say the Faith Mission is like, well, we don't know this person, or the postman gets tired of delivering a hundred of these things, or whatever, it somehow gets lost in the shuffle, then that homeless person is left with doing a provisional ballot.

Then you also have the issue then the next thing is what about the homeless person, is that person likely to have ID, you get to that issue. And I think that we all know the homeless person is unlikely to have ID.

MR. TOKAJI: I have very little to add to that. Under the law someone should be able to cast a regular ballot if they provide for example a government check with the address to which they are registered, like the example of the Faith Shelter.

Now, there are going to be a lot of homeless people who are not going to have that. And those people are going to end up casting provisional ballots, which they can do in either one of two ways, either providing the last four digits of their Social Security number. If they don't have a Social Security number by signing an affidavit saying that they are who they said they are.
I think one of the big things to watch is the procedures for determining whether and how those provisional ballots get counted.

And this is one of the areas of the law that I find as I mentioned in my earlier testimony extraordinarily confusing.

I'm sure even the most conscientious election officials will find it confusing as well, and I think it's something we all have to keep an eye on in this and subsequent elections.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Ms. Citrino.

MS. CITRINO: When you mentioned the Disability Act, you said there were two components with what the voting booth itself was going to look like. The other part was actually getting into the building.

And given that so many buildings are not accessible, including courthouses and older buildings such as elementary schools, which have been polling places, what is being done about having the building itself be suitable as a polling place?

MR. TOKAJI: One of my colleagues who is a disability rights expert with Cloker (spelled phonetically) actually wrote a comment on precisely this question several months ago.
Ohio has to its credit made some funds available to -- to improve the accessibility of polling places through such things as ramps to go over stairs.

Her calculation, however, as I mentioned earlier we've got about at least 1500 polling places in the state that are not accessible to -- to people with mobility impairments and other physical impairments.

Her calculation was the amount of money -- and I can't remember the number off the top of my head, I can certainly get it for you afterwards, was not nearly going to be sufficient to meet those needs.

MS. CITRINO: So are we violating the Help America Vote Act?

MR. TOKAJI: We're violating -- actually we're violating the ADA. And there's an access to handicap document that even predated the ADA, and Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act that requires accessibility by federally funded entities.

So I would say with considerable confidence that there are many counties in the state not presently complying with ADA.

MS. CITRINO: Is there monetary remedies to people who are denied access to vote because they are not able to enter the polling place?
MR. TOKAJI: I believe the answer to that question is, yes, under Title II of the Americans with Disability Act, someone could go into -- I know they can get injunctive relief and attorneys fees. And I believe that one could also pursue a monetary remedy, but I'd have to check that to make sure.

MS. CITRINO: Is there any state remedy?

MR. TOKAJI: I can't answer that question off the top of my head.

MR. TOKAJI: There may be some state law that parallels the ADA and would provide similar remedies. I don't know off the top of my head, that's a good question.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Yes, Ms. Ramos.

MS. RAMOS: You talked several times about provisional voting and I know that you seem -- it seemed like there was a problem with that.

Provisional voting, is it not until they can verify the information because you call, I know the board of elections takes those and calls to make sure the address is right, the person is there.

I'm sure it's not the best way to do it, but it does allow the person to vote, they are not denied the right to vote and they confirm it. I feel there is something on that, tell me why.
MR. TOKAJI: Let me be clear, I think that certainly provisional ballots are better than no ballots at all, all right.

That if the idea behind provisional ballots -- and Paul touched on this in his testimony, is recommended by the Carter Ford Commission, which convened in 2001 to study the problems that emerged in Florida and other states.

And what the Carter Ford Commission noticed is, hey, there's a lot of people's names who don't appear on registration lists.

Where that's the case we ought to allow those people to cast a provisional ballot and then we can subsequently verify they are registered, I totally agree with that, I think it was a good change in the law.

I wish that Congress, touching on the point that Professor Moke mentioned, had been clear about provisional ballots being counted even if cast in the wrong precincts, but that was a good change in the law.

My problem with H.B. 3, and I'd be concerned about H.B. 3, is that it channels a lot of folks who had previously cast regular ballots into the provisional ballot pathway, in particular those who don't have the proper forms of identification when they appear at the polling place, or certain voters who are challenged, right.
So provisional ballots are certainly better than no ballot at all. They are not as good as what is a regular ballot.

And what's going to happen once H.B. 3 is implemented is a lot of people who in past years would have cast regular ballots are now going to be casting provisional ballots. It's uncertain how many of those ballots at the end of the day will actually be counted.

What is certain is that by channeling people from the regular ballot pathway into the provisional ballot pathway is going to mean that the results of elections is going to be less certain, and that the margin of litigation will be wider and that we can -- we're facing the prospect of more contested elections afterwards, because more people are being channeled from the regular ballot pathway into the provisional ballot pathway.

MS. RAMOS: And I guess that's where I guess I'm not quite certain, because you only have ten days to verify, I believe ten days in which to verify provisional ballots.

So even if they are routed that way, and what you're saying -- doesn't the board of elections have to keep track of those and they have to account for those?

So I'm trying to see where you think that they are going to be not counted I guess.
MR. TOKAJI: Well, a lot in every election are not counted.

MS. RAMOS: That's because they are not verifiable.

MR. TOKAJI: -- Or because --

MS. RAMOS: -- That was the second part to this, as long as the boards of elections can confirm, will that statewide data base serve as that, too, so that if you vote somewhere different within counties that they can also verify for purpose of casting a ballot, provisional ballot?

MR. TOKAJI: If it functions properly the statewide registration data base will deal with some of these problems, that is the first category that I mentioned, right.

People who appear at the polling place finds that their names for whatever reason aren't on the list, hopefully it will make it easier in the long run to track those people down.

But for a lot of other voters, particularly those who don't have ID, that's not germane to the problem at hand.

MS. TURCER: One of the reasons I worry about provisional ballots had to do with the committee hearings on House Bill 3.

One of the things that was asked of the Secretary of State's Office was, all right, we know how many provisional ballots were cast, and we know how many were certified as appropriately cast ballots, so that they counted, if you want to call it that.

What were the reasons? What were the reasons that the rest of them were in fact not, you know, found to be valid?

And this is material that was never provided to the committee by the Secretary of State's office. And it was requested repeatedly.

Now, we can only assume that, you know, we can all make different assumptions, but it definitely worries me that at least some of the counties didn't review the provisional ballots, other than to go, yea, yea, nay, nay.

There was not the thoughtfulness that we'd be able to say we didn't accept this one because the address was not right, we didn't accept this one, because we just never received a voter registration, we don't know.

MR. MOKE: One of their -- one other aspect of your question concerns the issue of which provisional ballots are going to count, and which will not count.

And part of the fault here, if there is fault to be found lies in HAVA. Because the language -- the original language in HAVA was pretty vague concerning that part of the law.

And if you look back, as Dan was saying, to the original Ford Carter Commission back in 2002, what they were saying was, well, we ought to allow a voter to cast a provisional ballot if he or she is not in the right precinct, but the ballot they get would count with respect to say statewide issues, or federal issues, not local school board issues that would be precinct specific.

But Ohio in H.B. 3 has rejected that approach and has instead said that you have to vote in the proper precinct, otherwise the entire ballot, including federal issues isn't going to be counted.

MS. TURCER: And I think we need to remember that there are multiple precincts at the same polling location.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Mr. Doshi.

MR. DOSHI: The question is related to the identification, you said you require valid and current driver's license, one of the options you have in the driver's license is opting out a Social Security number.

And the reason is I ask that, I had opted not to put my Social Security number on my current and valid driver's license when up for renewal.

Well, they would not accept any other kind of identification other than a Social Security card. I had to literally go back, I told them I give my United States passport to prove I'm a citizen.
It will not do, you have -- you have to get the Social Security card. I hold current driver's license, all I'm asking you, to renew it they said nothing they can do, go to the Social Security office, get the Social Security form filled out by the officer there, bring the paper, we'll accept that.

I don't know if this kind of suggestion, would it be acceptable or would we still have the same problem?

MR. TOKAJI: I mean I'll tell you what should happen and what I'm worried about in terms of what will happen.

What should happen is that if you've got a current and valid identification, including a driver's license, even if it's a driver's license that does not have your Social Security number on it you should be allowed to cast your regular ballot.

I'm concerned that that proviso won't be applied as written, or that it will be applied disparately, different voters will be treated differently at the polling place.

We of course in this country have a long history of facially neutral requirements being applied disparately, and discriminatorily toward certain groups of voters, especially based on race or ethnicities.

MR. DOSHI: I may have to fill out more papers.
MR. TOKAJI: Well, come see me if that happens.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Mr. Humeidan.

MR. HUMEIDAN: I have a couple of questions, the first in line with what was just asked. If you mentioned that somebody's citizenship was challenged, they have to prove that they are a naturalized citizen, what if somebody's citizenship is challenged, but they are not a naturalized citizen, they were a U.S. born citizen, they have an accent and they look a little different, what would they have to do in that case?

MR. TOKAJI: Here's the series of questions that's been provided, if someone is challenged on the grounds that you are not a citizen: Are you a citizen of the United States? Second, are you a native or naturalized citizen? Third, where were you born? Fourth, what official documentation do you possess to prove your citizenship, please provide that documentation.

Now, what the provision provides is that if someone said, at least as I understand it, if someone is saying they are a native born citizen, my interpretation of this provision is that they are obligated to take that person's word for it.

But if you say they are a naturalized citizen then you've got to provide that documentation. Of course as I mentioned in response to the last question, what the law says is one thing, how it's applied is quite another.

And I'm really worried about this provision in particular being applied on a discriminatory basis. I also think there may have been constitutional issues surrounding disparate treatment of native born, as opposed to naturalized citizens.

MR. HUMEIDAN: Is there a standard system that is used or is it at the discretion of the poll workers?

And in line with that is there -- House Bill 3 seems like its standardizing some of the election issues statewide, is there any money allocated to training the poll workers to make sure that the training is standardized across the state and all of these new laws and regulations are enforced deeply across the state, rather than being treated differently in every county?

MR. TOKAJI: I'll let Catherine take the question about funding. I'll take the first part of your question saying that this is one of the issues.

There is a great deal of discretion on the part of election judges. As I read in the statutes, a caveat as to who may challenge.

Once a challenge is made I think the discretions are limited as to what they can and can't require. But at the front end there is a lot of discretion.

One can very easily see this discretion being used in a discriminatory way, and in a way that intimidates or is meant to intimidate certain classes of voters, especially racial and ethnic minorities.

MS. TURCER: And I was going to say much like you were talking about, there is traditional poll worker training. There is additional monies made available due to HAVA because of the new voting apparatus.

And in fact tomorrow morning I would spend some time asking representatives of the Secretary of State's office about how that money is actually being expended and giving examples, and asking more specific kinds of questions about what are the directives the Secretary of State is actually giving to make sure that each of the counties administer all of this in the same way, so there is equal protection across the state.

So I would use that as an opportunity to ask them
how they are actually going to implement it.

MR. DOSHI: For the disability I'm very concerned. There are 1500 polling places that don't meet the requirements.

On the other hand how many -- do we have the statistics as to the number of disabled bodies registered in the State of Ohio?

MR. TOKAJI: I don't have that information.

I think there is somebody on the next panel who will be able to provide you with that information.

MS. TURCER: Sue will. Sue is from AXIS, is on the next panel, she'll talk about disability issues. I think it's an important thing to think about, especially as the population is aging our mobility questions are going to get bigger and bigger.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: We really appreciate your thoughtful testimony from all of you this afternoon, you certainly helped frame a very important issue for all of us. And on behalf of the committee we do thank you.

MR. TOKAJI: Thank you for having us.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: We're going to take a 15 minute break and we'll reconvene at 3:20.

(Back on the record at 3:22 p.m.)

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: We'd like to thank our next panelists for being with us today. We have, Mr. Gresham, Sam Gresham from Common Cause. Peg Rosenfeld from League of Women Voters. And Sue Willis from AXIS. And we'll begin with Mr. Gresham.

MR. GRESHAM: My name is Samuel Gresham, and I am Acting Executive Director for Common Cause-Ohio.

Common Cause is a nonpartisan, nonprofit advocacy organization founded in 1970 by John Gardner, as a vehicle for citizens to make their voices heard in the political process and to hold elected leaders accountable to the public interest.

Our mission is to strengthen public participation and faith in the institution of government; to ensure that government and the political processes serve the general interests, rather than special interests; to curb the excessive influence of money on government, decisions and elections; to promote fair elections and high ethical standards for government officials; and to protect the civil rights and civil liberties of all persons.

Now, with nearly 300,000 members and supporters and 38 state organizations, Common Cause remains committed to honest open and accountable government, as well as encouraging citizen participation in democracy.

In Ohio Common Cause has served for more than 30 years of working to make government operate better and to be held accountable to the citizens of Ohio.

On behalf of our more than 10,000 members and supporters in Ohio, I would like to thank you for this opportunity to share some of our concerns about the electoral processes and the systems in Ohio.
Some Ohioans have come to think of their voting like the proverbial Forrest Gump, a box of chocolates, you never know what you're gonna get.

This fall Ohioans will see even more changes; new voting machines coming on line; absentee voting available to everyone; the requirements were resulting from House Bill 3, and the continuing implementation of HAVA.

These changes will be implemented in a difficult environment with regards to trust in the political process.

I'm going to talk about the legislative aspect. I know some of the presenters this morning dealt on big picture issues. I'm going to deal with the specifics of the implementation and potential effect of the legislation.

There are two primary bills I'm going to talk about, that is H.B. 34, which passed October 19th, '05. And the second piece I'm going to talk about, which is H.B. 3, which was passed on January 26th, '06.

I want to start with House Bill 3, and talk about the no fault absentee component of that and some of the problems that may arise as to no fault absentee component.

If you remember a few years ago there had to be a rational reason why you got an absentee ballot, some sort of circumstance prevents you to vote.

That's no longer true. As a result of that activists and community strategists and politicians will change their approach to how they deliver to the polls.

If you understand now under H.B. 234 we have 35 days in which a person can vote. And they can vote by going to the board of elections, or getting an absentee ballot through the mail.

They can actually go down to the board of elections and they can do it. Now, 60 to 90 days out they will actually be able to vote. And a few days after that we've been told five days after -- I mean registered, and five days processing, they will be able to vote.

So within that 35 day period they may be able to register and vote. Now, from an activist's standpoint that changes the whole approach to how we deliver people to the polls.

Now, what happened with that, that's a great advantage and we appreciate that. But then we come back in House Bill 3, and the boards of elections were asking for satellite offices. They wanted satellite offices, because they were anticipating if we have H.B. 234, we have absentee ballots, there will be people coming in.

Unfortunately in H.B. 3 they did provide but for one satellite office. So that says Cuyahoga County can only have one office.
In Franklin County Matt Damschroder told us, he's the Executive Director of the Board of Elections, they want to open up six satellite offices, which would have facilitated over that 35 day period, possibility of more people voting. Under the current rules on H.B. 3 we won't be able to do that, they can have only one satellite office. Now, I want to dwell on that for a little bit, because I think most of the 527's on both sides of the aisles will see this as a tremendous opportunity to get the idea of people who are hard to get in and vote and register. I think in that 90 day period you'll see before the election a lot of activity, and they're going to be taking a lot of people in. Had they prevailed in adding satellite offices we would have had less of what we consider congestion or less problems with people executing their vote. I think you're going to see long lines at the boards of elections, specifically in the small communities. You're going to see long lines within that 35 day period. People coming in early trying to get their voting done. The next subject I want to go to is on House Bill 3, but you've had enough discussion on that, and that was on the identification. I'm sure everybody who has spoken before you talked about identification.
But I want to come at identification from a different perspective. And the different perspective I'm concerned about is the poll worker.

Now, you have asked the poll worker to change his or her role. They were simply people who were processing people in through the election process, you know, basically if the signature matched.

Now they are now compliance officers. They will have to determine which piece of evidence that that person brought in is in compliance with the standards for voting in the State of Ohio.

That in itself will create a set of dynamics that we never experienced before in the city and across this state. People may not be as accurately or as much informed about the new process and procedures on identification. So we anticipate -- which I talked to earlier that we anticipate that you will see some boards of elections with long lines.

I think you will also see the increased utilization of long lines as a result of dealing with the issue of do you have the proper identification.

Now, there are scenarios that will fall outside of that. But I don't want to dwell on what it does to elderly people who live in assisted living.

I'm thinking about primarily those people who are sitting there and have to make that decision. I have a young man I used to go to the poll with, and I know Wee-Wee is going to have a problem, because when Wee-Wee comes he does not know that he has to have these new requirements and he's going to make a fuss in the polling place about the credibility of his information. And I think you're going to see that in more places than you believe.

The other aspect I want to talk about is the return of processing the voter registration application.

There's a new rule that says if I send the application out to you and it bounces back, and its undeliverable your registration is flagged. And when you come in there is a bit more scrutiny that you will now have to have.

Well, that's going to complex things, because people are going to assume that they are registered to vote.
And if the cards come back there's no way that they know that they've been flagged. So there is going to be a complexity in that issue.

Now, to compound that even more under H.B. 3 we went from four notifications of elections and qualifications of elections down to three.

Now, I want you to think, we're introducing new rules, and that you have absentee ballots, a no fault voter.
Now we have new requirements that people can vote that have to have these ID requirements.

We now have reduced the number of notifications they will get from four to three. So if you just take those three things alone, there is going to be less knowledge known about the process than anything else.

Now, we anticipate from Common Cause that the Governor's race is going to be a highly contested race in November of 2006. It will not be won by a landslide, it will be a close election.

These three variables that I just talked to you about will play into that election now. The 35 days no fault absentee ballot, the fact is now that people working in the polling place have to now become compliance workers with regard to the evidence that we have, and now we reduced the notification.

Now, there is one other thing that didn't happen was an allocation of resources to these boards of elections to educate people about the new requirements that are going to happen.

We lobbied for those things, but it did not happen, it was not in the offering.

The next subject I'd like to talk about is provisional ballots. Provisional ballots will now increase exponentially, because of the identification requirements and the types of things you will have to do.

Fortunately in some communities it will not be a separate ballot, it will be on the electronic machine.

But our concerns about the provisional ballot really falls in three areas. One, the rationale and that we're going to see more, but your ballot is held in a no man's land limbo for ten days until they decide whether it's a legitimate ballot or not.

And then further than that if they decide it's not a legitimate ballot, you don't have the requirements, you have no right to challenge, you can't come in and challenge.

So in essence if I go out to the polling place and I go in and I have to end up with a provisional ballot, there is a ten day window there that I don't know whether my ballot counted or not.

And by exponentially increasing the number, the effect will be the delay, the count on the actual election results.

If you have a close election, and you have 15, 20 percent of the outstanding ballots are provisional that could have a significant effect on that outcome of that election.

Because of these new rules that we have now we expect an exponential increase in the number of ballots.

Now, may not be a big thing to you when I say this, recounts and the aspect of recounts within the Democratic process, that is I as a potential candidate believe that I have an opportunity to run for office, and then the election comes up to be close.

And what it costs me under House Bill 3, we increase the cost from $50 per precinct -- I mean from $10 per precinct to $50 per count.

So now as a candidate that's a five time -- five fold increase in the cost, if I have a recount now that I have to pay, we don't think that's fair and we think it was too large, but again it will affect the Democratic process in the State of Ohio.

Now, there is a series of offenses that have now been raised in their criminality in the affect that it has on the person.

Offenses concerning the declaration of candidacy and the petition and declaration and attempt to be a write-in. And nominating petitions and other petitions increasing from a misdemeanor first degree to a felony -- to a fifth degree penalty for knowingly, directly and indirectly engaging in certain offenses concerning any declaration of candidacy, petition declaration of intent to be a write-in candidate, nominating petitions and other petitions for the purpose of being a candidate.
Now, if you don't follow those procedurally let's take for an example in southern Ohio there was a gentleman that didn't get enough signatures to get on the ballot and run for Strictland's seat.

Now, under this law, what does that mean, if he you know, that the issues associated with that we're criminalizing.

Further interference with an election has moved from a misdemeanor to a fifth degree. Campaigning near the voting place is now no longer a misdemeanor.

Now, the one that interests me the most is the signature and circulation. And I think my analogy of Forrest Gump, chalked full of nuts, this is a great example of it, it says requires a person seeking to propose a state law, constitutional amendments by initial petition that referred to voting by any law and any item by a referendum to obtain the signatures of a thousand people.

Before it was only a hundred, before submitting a proposal for constitutional amendment. In a measure to be referred to with the summary, require a voter signature in the initiative petition to be the original ink, provide that only the initiative petition containing a voter's original, prohibits persons from circulating any initiative petition, unless this person is a resident of Ohio. That wasn't true before.
Prohibits a person from signing initiative or referendum, unless the person is a registered elector.

That means they have to be registered to vote in the State of Ohio. For homeless people who may have done some of that work prior, it would be difficult for them now to do this work.

Then it sets up a whole series of rules, and I'll paraphrase them, I won't read them for you. It says if you are given a petition and you don't turn that petition in within the first time frame you have a warning against you.

If you do it three more times it moves up. It creates a whole new range of law associated with registration and petition drives. It drives up the potential penalty for it.

Now, you say to yourself what's the net effect?
The net effect is it puts a chill over people who now want to get involved with the petition process.

It puts a chill on people who want to do -- circulate petitions for people for the candidates of office, because of the new legal requirements.

I mean if you don't get the petition back into a certain source within 24 days that's a clock that's ticking that's associated with you.

I'm sure someone talked about the process of what it does to have to go for training, and if you are a for profit entity you have to register and now you have to go for training. I think that has a chilling effect.

It's interesting if you look at the culture of people who are associated with the political process in our country, particularly those who are at the grass roots level, they do it because they believe in the process. They do it because they want to fundamentally make changes. I think the difficulty that these new sets of legislation, it will deter good people, because of now the criminality aspect of what we've done to the law.

I don't know if I would let my sons or my daughter go do this type of activity now, and naively they make a mistake, naively they do something wrong, but now it has escalated within the context of how they can be penalized for that.

It says to me I don't know if my father is going to let my mother work at the polling place next year, because there is going to be so much pressure on her to work, she's a volunteer, because of all these new rules.

Now, I'd like to close by thanking you for this opportunity and leave you with remarks of one of our great citizens, Groucho Marx.

Groucho Marx says politics is the art of looking for trouble, finding it everywhere, diagnosing it incorrectly, and applying the wrong remedies.

I think House Bill 3 is a good example of what Mr. Marx was talking about. We didn't find the right animal and when we did we put six legs on it, and it's running around in our country now and people are shocked about what it will do to them, and to the electoral process.

Now, I offered a little levity there, but I think you need to understand how people see the State of Ohio at a long distance lens.

I was in North Carolina, I was in Washington, D.C., I was in Baltimore, they think we are the most scandalous, criminal corrupt state in the union. I mean we're the new Florida.

And I think in the context of the politics that we are involved with and the rule-making in the State of Ohio I hope I've shed a little light on some of the complexities and some of the potential problems.

Now, I'll close. This is not new to the people who made the legislation. We stayed up late at night, all of the people on this panel, all of the people back here trying to convince them in individual meetings, grabbing them in the halls during lobby days, but they still persisted in that approach in putting this legislation together.

We have more than a hundred years of experience of people who are involved in our organizations, and we believe Ohio this fall, this November, will be on the plate of the center of America, and we hope that these rules don't disappoint us. We hope that these rules don't embarrass us. We hope that these rules don't make us look bad.

But our projection, if we do not modify them or do something we are going to look exceedingly bad.

Thank you very much.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Thank you. Ms. Rosenfeld.

MS. ROSENFELD: It's been pointed out that some of people can't hear us, hard to believe with Sam. It may strike you that some of us are a little obsessed with House Bill 3, and you're right. I've spent the last year and-a-half of my life on this bill trying to get it modified and when we couldn't get it modified and when we couldn't get it amended trying to get it defeated, and you can see how successful we were.

I just want you to see what we're talking about. This is the bill, and this is printed on two sides. So this is what we're talking about.

While it was going through the legislature, it started out as a 27 page bill. Then it went to 625 pages. Then it went to 603. Then it went to 400. Every hearing was a new bill, and we ended up with this.

You have a copy of my notes on this, this is a ten page guide I did that just to tell what's happened with this bill, it's enormous and that's why we are all so obsessed.

I just -- some of this you've heard. Let me -- this is one I don't think people talked about, I expect Sue will, about the new requirement, attorney-in-fact, which I have to say I'm not an attorney, I had never heard of this before.

We've always had the provision that people who need assistance in voting can have the help of the person of their choice, so long as it's not a candidate, employer, union official, or poll workers, and you could have assistance.

Well, this is saying that -- I don't know what kind of disability, if you can't sign your own name, that you get an attorney-in-fact.

And the process for doing this is just I think unbelievably complicated. So they made it more difficult for people with disabilities to be able to vote.

It's been mentioned that you can no longer go to state courts if you think there is fraud in an election, you have to go to Federal court.

But the state is the one who defines what's fraud, but we can't go to state court if we see something happening out there.
Restrictions on petitions as Sam mentioned, there are all sorts of things just making it harder to use elections to make things happen the way they should.

Write-in candidates -- candidate write-ins, because they become adamant at the last minute. So for a long time you could just write in someone's name. I was once written in as mayor, well, they stopped counting those.

And I can understand, they were having to count Mickey Mouse and Donald Duck, Peg Rosenfeld.

So they said you had to turn in something saying you intended to be a write-in candidate ahead of time, fine, you had to do that ten days before the election.

Well, now they made it longer, now it's up to 62 days before the election, which pretty much means we're not going to have a lot of write-ins, which was the intent.

Ex-felons can't circulate petitions. You have to be a registered Ohioan to circulate petitions. You can only put one proposal per petition, so you can't have like we had last fall with the Ron amendments.

And then again you have this -- you have to have this attorney-in-fact for somebody with a disability to sign a petition.

Restrictions on voting, and then we get into this documentary stuff for citizenship. One that I've talked about, my father was in the Air Force, so this came to my mind, if you were born in Wies Baden, Germany because your father was in the Air Force, you are a native born American citizen, but you have no documentation to prove you're a U.S. citizen. You just don't have it.

But when they ask you for those questions and they ask where were you born you're going to say Germany. And they are going to say, well, where is your naturalization, well.

Satellite voting and ballot on demand are restricted. As Sam talked about the ballot on demand could be very important if you need to print ballots, because voting machines break down or something, if you can print ballots on demand at a precinct no, you can only do it now with restrictions. You have to be able to number them consecutively, and they've really made it impossible.

Harassment at the polls is prohibited, but it isn't defined. That seems to me to kind of open everything up.

Jurisdiction is the precinct not the county. I maintain to this day the National Voter Registration Act, the Motor Voter Act defined it as county, and that was what we should be using. We lost that one.

This ID, required for everyone at every election, including absentee voting. So think about that, if you're -- if you want to vote by absentee, I immediately think about when my mother was living, who was 95, and who didn't have an Ohio driver's license, didn't have a bank account, didn't have a utility bill, she was in a nursing home, I paid all of those things with her, so she didn't have any of these forms of identification.

Now, she could have used the last four digits of her Social Security number, but she couldn't go to the Board of Elections with additional ID to have proof who she was, I think she would have been disenfranchised.

And if you are home bound and you don't have a driver's license, and you have to make a copy of one of these other things, I don't know about you, but I don't think too many home bound people have a xerox machine in the basement.

So they are home bound, they have to go out of the house to go get a copy of their utility bill in order to be able to vote by absentee ballot. That they need to do, because they can't get out.

Provisional ballots, we've gone through. Do you know there are three different forms that are going to have to be filled out for each provisional ballot? Don't you want to be in line behind the provisional ballot person while the poll worker helps them fill out the forms.

Okay. Restrictions on voter registration, if you are paid to do voter registration, we did get them to modify it a little bit, you can now continue to send them to the Secretary of State or to any board.

But you have to take this training program and you have to send a copy of the affirmation that you did the training. That form has to accompany any voter registrations that you send into a board of elections. I don't know what happens if you don't do that.

Whether they refuse to take the registrations or whether they arrest you or -- I don't know, but it's a felony if you don't do this.

And, oh, paid -- because I asked about this, paid for doing registrations includes if you are a bank teller, and you have a stack of voter registration forms on the counter, and so say in the month of September anybody who comes in to cash a check or something, you say would you like a voter registration form, you are assisting in registration. You must have taken the training and filled out all of this stuff or it's a fifth degree felony.

If you say, sure, I'll mail it in for you, you are assisting in registration. And if you're paid, and paid does not mean that this is your full-time job, it means you work at a college and you're helping freshmen register to vote, well, because the college pays you and part of your, you know, sort of on the side is helping registration, you're being paid to register.

I know it does not make any sense at all, but I specifically asked the sponsor about that.

Ex-felons may not register voters. An ex-felon in Ohio can register to vote, but you may not be a fully participating person, you may not register voters, you may not circulate petitions.

And then let's just run through the things that are not in this bill.

There is nothing in here about poll worker training. There is not really anything serious about voter information requirements. There is a requirement that the Secretary do something.

Voting machine security, there is nothing in here. There is nothing in this bill that's been pointed out earlier about a random hand count to make sure that the machines are recording votes accurately.

Recounts and -- there are deadlines put in the bill for when a recount must be completed or when a challenge must be addressed, but there's nothing in the bill about how you meet that deadline.

It just says must be done by this date. But it doesn't give you any, you know, back from that, how you get -- if you're not done by that date you're done, period, even if you haven't finished everything you should have done.

It isn't specified in the law that the voter verified paper audit trail is the official count when you compare.

There is nothing in the bill to safeguard against people inadvertently or however being deleted from the voter registration list.

Study in Cleveland, some people very laboriously went through and found people disappeared off the polling lists between September and November, and I think they were inadvertent.

It's very easy if you've got a long list to just hit the wrong button. But these folks are disenfranchised. There is nothing in this bill to provide some mechanism for preventing that.

There is nothing in it on accessibility of any kind. And there is no enforcement. Other than that it's just a peachy king bill.

As I say, if you wonder why we're obsessed maybe this gives you some idea of the bad things that this bill is going to -- so my answer to are we going to be ready for the post '06 elections, the answer is no.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Thank you. Ms. Willis.

MS. WILLIS: Good afternoon. I would first like to tell you all that I direct the AXIS, A-X-I-S, Center for Public Awareness of People with Disabilities within the State of Ohio. We are a federally funded project awarded out of the Developmental Disability Council.

I've had this project for 15 years and travel across the state to meet with all kinds of disability groups, not any one population.

So the things I am going to talk about this afternoon all apply across the board, whether blind, deaf, have a mobility impairment.

And I also work with many of the large disability organizations, Governors Council, Independent Living Center, UCP and the like.

So believe me voting has been one of our major discussion points over the last several years. I'm going to try and tell you what we feel are important about those things.

I'm not going to talk a whole lot about House Bill 3, I think that's pretty well been covered.

We believe that people with disabilities, a lot of them in general don't realize, don't understand, are never informed that voting is their right, just as it is every other citizen.

Because many folks live in group homes or are sheltered in some way they don't always get the awareness that the typical population gets.

So one of our priorities in the last couple of years at least has been to let people know about their rights to vote, no matter their disability.

Even a lot of people say, well, if you don't have the right kind of cognitive ability or mental capacity, you can't vote, and that is not true. So we're trying to get the word out and get people registered.

I will say that this little kink here about offering registrations is going to really hurt us, because we try and put registration forms at every Jobs and Family Service office, every county Board of MRDD, all of your BBR offices.

And as people come in we sincerely ask them are you registered to vote. We need to find out what this is going to do to us and our people who are asking us questions.

We've also asked them to not just ask once, but to repeatedly do that kind of questioning, so that if people moved, if they've changed their name and they don't understand the process that they are kept up to date on being registered to vote.

I think one of the problems probably in not making people with disabilities aware is they become so encumbered with their daily living skills, whether it be going to the grocery, or finding the right home, accessibility issues, we often forget to build them into the community and do what everybody else does, so it might take a little more time and effort, but we feel it's valuable.

I heard someone question earlier about the numbers of people with disabilities in Ohio who vote. It's a very, very -- at least at this day and time, it's very difficult to judge.

We know that there are over two million people with disabilities, adults in the State of Ohio. However, when you register or when you go to the polls you are not asked to check off do you have a disability.

So the only way we've been able to count numbers is through our organizations, and informally ask how many of your people have registered to vote.

And we're coming up with only about 30 percent, it's very low. 30 percent of those people get to the polls, or are even registered and may not get to the polls.

So we need to as a constituency work on getting those people to the polls.

We know that a lot of things that the typical population does become more of a burden for people with disabilities, even getting to the poll.

Transportation is an issue across the board with these people with disabilities. So we need to start looking at everything that disenfranchises a voter is doubly important to a person with a disability.

    Takes me twice as long, and I have my own van with a lift, I don't have to rely on a driver and someone to take me in and out.

    So I'm just saying that we need to make the process as easy for people with disabilities as it is for everyone else who walks through the doors.

    And of course we touched upon this before, but accessibility issues, and I'm speaking right now of physical access are extreme.

    I have to tell you my experience with the SOS Office, Secretary of State's office, in that three or four years ago we were working with some very good people at the office making headway perhaps on how to improve the process, get things squared away in terms of accessibility.

    But as each of those people began to get in tune with what the disability community needed, they moved them up to another position and we got another person.

    We have been through I don't know how many people
now. And I will tell you that we are very disappointed, aggravated, whatever, at them not listening to this large population of what we feel are entitled voters.

    Very recently, in fact I think it was late last summer, the Secretary of State finally appointed an ADA coordinator.

ADA started in 1990, we should have had an ADA coordinator for all of that time. So we just got one. And he appointed a group of five or six people to work with this ADA coordinator to figure out these disability issues. He just left it in their hands.

I will tell you that it has been extremely hard to get any information out of that group, to get any numbers out of that group.

I went to their meeting last week, only three of them were even there. I don't feel that we are really being listened to and our problems being addressed.

I asked about HAVA money for making places accessible. Because I know we've got limited funds, I can't tell you exactly what that was. And I was told that we have in Ohio 11,000 polling sites, not precincts, but actual places.

Now, if we have 11,000 and we know a massive number of them were not accessible, we should have been using that money, but when I asked have we used up all of our money yet, he said, oh, no, we have a lot of money left over.

Now, what are we doing with that money, we need to be fixing those places.

I do know that this little committee sent to every county board of elections a booklet. They took a document designed by the Department of Justice, people who wrote a lot of the ADA and the Department of Justice created, it's on the website specifically for accessibility of polling places.

Well, this little group thought it was too long and too cumbersome, so they decided to shorten it, make it smaller type.

They took out things like restrooms, in other words they took a federal document, which we all should be following it, and kind of made it into their own document.

And they sent that to every county board to do their own assessment. You take this document and you tell us what's wrong.

Well, I can tell you from experience that many things can be misjudged in reading things like that, you know, someone might judge a doorway, and I mean measure it and say this one is 36, someone else might say it's close. So we'll say it's close and it passes.

I'm not assured that even those counties who did receive the document are making their places accessible. To get any funds at all they turn back a grant request to the SOS office, and they have agreed to only give money to temporary changes.

Like if there is a step in a building they will buy a portable ramp, they don't want to put money into a building that they don't really own.

Now, if they are public buildings they should have been right to begin with based on ADA. If they are private buildings and there are other things wrong, I think we need to be looking for a different location.

Someone mentioned this morning we still have 1500 that aren't right. I can't tell you that that's an accurate number, but from people that I talk to that does not surprise me. Many, many things can make a place accessible.

And while I'm on it we'll talk about the new equipment a little.

The Debolt equipment and the ES&S equipment are accessible units that people with disabilities can use, probably any of the units that are out of sight, you don't need to go to one special unit.

The optical scan equipment however needs a unit that is accessible. So I don't know how counties are setting those up or what they are using as their accessible units.

If any of you have ever tried to fill in those little circles you know that for many people with disabilities that's an impossibility, they still have that concern because absentee ballots are going to be little tiny circles.

I'm not sure we're going to be able to accomplish that. But anyway the concern about having an ADA unit in every site is taken care of because of the new equipment.

The only concern would be if a person needs an adaptation from what we're calling them, accommodations to that piece of equipment, such as the little thing you blow in, almost anyone who's blind, deaf, physical mobilities, et cetera, could use the equipment.

But if it is someone who totally wants to vote on his or her own, go in there and vote on his own, and the only way he can make a mark or push a button is through a blow tube, according to law, that is a reasonable accommodation and the polling site should have that available.

We know that is not going to happen this go round.

How would they know ahead of time, all that stuff has not been worked out. But we do need to look at the people who do come in to vote, are any of them asking for anything beyond what is on-site, and make plans in the future to take care of those individuals.

I want to mention a little bit about the attorney-in-fact provision that is written in the House Bill 3.

We have looked and looked and looked at that language, because we talked and talked our heads off and didn't get anywhere.

In fact I sat with Senator Coglin the day before it passed, the way we are reading it currently the attorney-in-fact is meant to be an alternate, it does not have to be the only way a person could sign.

So if a person comes in to put their signature in the book, and let's say they have been used to using a stamp or making their mark or having their assistant sign for them, if those are things they do in their typical lifetime, day to day living, those are their legal ways of signing, those are accepted.

But we're afraid that the poll workers are going to read attorney-in-fact in the document and they are going to point fingers at those people and say if you don't have your attorney-in-fact you cannot vote.

Ohio Legal Rights Service works a lot with the disability community, they have read this language, had their attorneys read it and read it.

They are saying that is an option only, and if there are any cases brought forth they'll be glad to take them to court, but we're hoping that doesn't happen.

That does bring to mind, though, we are very concerned about poll worker training. And I've heard it brought up before, if we can get more of that 30 percent, more than the 30 percent of people with disabilities to the polls, will the poll workers be able to work with them efficiently and effectively in a respectful manner, get them through the voting process. We don't think they are getting any training in those efforts.

Once again the little group told me that they were all given, I don't know if they were given or they bought it, there is a 45 minute video that was produced for people with disabilities in the work place.

And they said, well, every county has one, all of the people have to look at it, you have to know what's in it and then we do further training.

I've talked with people in Franklin County and nobody has ever seen that video. And I don't think that between now and voting day they are going to get to look at that video. And it's simply a stepping stone. It's not all of the things you would need for interactive.

So what does a poll worker do who's never had to experience someone coming up who is nonverbal, how to act, how do you react and handle that person.

And before I think, we've had low numbers and we could probably work it out. But if we're going to go out there and make an effort to get more people voting, we already have lines of people with the new equipment and all of these other things, how are those people going to be taken care of.

And I don't want to use the excuse, well, let them vote absentee. I don't buy that one. I want to vote like everyone else votes. It's almost fun to go to the polls and see your neighbors and talk about this and that.

So poll worker training, and again we have HAVA money to be doing that, and we just don't think it's getting done.

Some of the things that we have concerns about are not really in law, but we from time to time term them best practices. To me it's almost the logical things that you do.

And I know I'll probably use 2004 as a prime example, because we lived through that one and it was long and laborious.

But our lines here at least in Franklin County were extensively long, we had no accommodations for people with disabilities to be standing there for two hours.

It would have been a simple thing in my mind to have some folding chairs available, a park bench, whatever.

You cannot take a person -- even a person who does not have a significant disability sometimes and make them stand for those periods of time. I think we need to be looking at simple accommodations.

I, for one, it was pouring down raining that day if some of you remember, I could not be in that line in the pouring down rain outside in this power wheel chair, it's just not a good thing to do. So I went home and came back twice until the line shortened.

Is there not some way we could take -- we do this at other movies and we take numbers, and we know when to come back. Is there some process we could put in place.

Many people with disabilities who got there and couldn't be in line for one reason or another could not come back as I could, they didn't have a driver or whatever.

So we lost people who had to go home, people who had to take their medications because there was not a drinking fountain around or people with diabetes who had to eat a snack, but if they left their spot in line you might as well go to the back again.

I think best practice would have us look at some easier solutions to accommodating people. And I think this will probably go across the board to a lot of audiences, not just people with disabilities.

Many of our other issues have been brought up before, I want to make one more mention, though, of the ID requirements.

Remember that across the board people with disabilities have the low incomes and do not have a typical ID or whatever in their pocket.

    I've heard it said, well, everybody is going to need one of those, just go get one. Well, even $5 to some people on SSDI or other minimum wage, they just don't have it.

    We have to make sure that ahead of time people know what they can bring with them and I don't see that happening. The information about what to do before they arrive at the polls I don't think is out there.

    So I thank you for your attention.

    CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Thank you, panelists.

    Questions, committee? Yes, Tom.

    MR. ROGERS: I can envision a poll worker getting over taken with his power, and my concern is how are you going to protect the poll worker, somebody will become irate and say I can't do this.

    MR. GRESHAM: Do you know at the Senate hearing I said that. I said you are putting these people at risk. If they don't know the new requirements there are going to be some incidents.

    I can say to you we're going to monitor H.B. 3 and where we find examples like that there is going to be a lot of litigation if this thing blows up, not only from good government perspective, but from individuals.

    MR. ROGERS: Are you going to provide police officers at each poll?

MR. GRESHAM: I don't think so.

MS. ROSENFELD: One thing I suspect will help this fall is the election protection program that was put in place for the 2004 election.

A lot of volunteers, both lay people and attorneys who had people out at polling places to help voters, ended up helping poll workers.

Because they -- some of them were better trained and knew what the rules were, and in fact my guess is at least for this election the election protection people would probably be the people who short of calling the cops, would step in and help the poll workers, know what the rules are, and B, kind of quiet things down. But, yeah, I think we could have some serious problems.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Yes, Ms. Presley.

MS. PRESLEY: I'm still hung up on this absentee voter ID and how in the world would that play out.

I don't understand how will they want you to fill out the form and send along a copy of your ID?

Now, and I'm not speaking for everyone, but with a person with a disability, if they were trying to send in absentee, well, that means you're going to have to go out somehow and get a copy, put it in, it just makes things that much harder.

While they took off the restriction they don't have to say why they need it or that they have a disability, they still made it twice as hard to get the documentation to prove who they are.

MS. ROSENFIELD: It was -- it's House Bill 234, and it was put in. It started off as a nice little bill, which we initially supported to allow 17 year olds to work at the polls, which I think was an excellent idea and did get affected and will be in effect.

But at the last minute they amended this quite deliberately to offset the Ron Amendment that was on the ballot last fall, to allow no excuse absentee voting.

But they put the ID requirement on I'm sure because they knew they were going to put an ID requirement into House Bill 3.

And so if they were going to have -- you would have to show ID to vote in person, they didn't want to let you vote absentee without ID or everybody would be voting absentee.

And they -- I don't think they -- they either don't think through the implications from this stuff, or they don't care.

MR. GRESHAM: I would support that they don't think through, but enough of us told them that we thought that these things would happen.

We think 30 percent of seniors will be disenfranchised as a result of this requirement. They are not going to be able to vote and it's going to deter them from voting and they won't vote, because it's going to become more complex.

But I want to let you know there is going to be a lot of litigation, there is going to be a lot of people in court if this thing blows up the way it plays out the way it will.

There will be a lot of people in court. This group, a couple other groups, the lawyers, if it plays out it becomes more complex than what we had in 2004 and 2002, and we end up having riots at polling places.

I mean people go berserk. I hope that does not happen. I know some communities where there are polling places that will happen, because they didn't know that you needed an ID, they didn't know the litany of things you could have as an option to this.

And they are going to say you have to vote provisionally, and that man will say I never had to vote provisionally, what does that mean.

Again, we come back to the poll worker is sitting there having to deal with this, they will get more abuse, I can tell you that now.
CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Yes, Mr Doshi.

MR. DOSHI: One thing that seems like you may need to consider is the language. I'm sure there are citizens in this city that are not English speaking. I wonder if there is any provisions for ballots for them?

MS. ROSENFELD: No. Ohio does not have -- we have no precincts with a sufficient number of anyone that we have that we come under the alternative language rights for federal law.

MS. WILLIS: But I will say that the equipment that we purchased can be adapted to other languages if the need for that is proven and it's a relatively simple process, so when you go in you tell what language and they key it in.

MS. ROSENFELD: Yeah, once it's set up. But Ohio does not meet any of the language requirements at this point.

MR. GRESHAM: Let me add to that. In the Voting Rights Act one of the issues in controversy now is Section 203. There is a provision that we have to, that's the part that needs to be renewed next year, we have to have those bilingual portions.

In meeting with some of the constitutional people Steve Chavet (spelled phonetically), Cincinnati Chair of the Constitutional Committee, House of Congress, they are not sure they are going to allocate dollars to make those types of things happen, where you can have multiple languages.

It's not -- as Peg points out, it's not a big issue here, but in Texas, California, Florida, it's a big issue.

MR. DOSHI: There are a lot of Somalians here.

MS. ROSENFELD: They are not citizens yet, that's the difference.

MR. DOSHI: 2008?

MS. ROSENFELD: I think it's five percent within -- within the county or within the precinct. I'm not sure, but we haven't hit the five percent.

MR. GRESHAM: Threshold.

MS. ROSENFELD: Threshold in any county.

The closest we were coming was maybe Lorain County was Spanish speaking people.

But we have not hit the threshold, and I have to tell you in all honesty election officials are not going to do it until required by law.

MR. DOSHI: If it's less than five percent than the general population they don't have to do anything?

MS. ROSENFELD: No. Now, some places may do it voluntarily, particularly maybe put out some voter information in alternative languages.

    But I don't think they are going to put the ballots in any other language until they have to.

    MR. DOSHI: If it's that simple, translation, and the machines are capable of doing it?

    MS. WILLIS: If the county boards are saying their money is so tight, which they've all been saying they don't even have a person to go do it. But it is true that the equipment, and when they looked at the equipment they purchased that it could be adapted.

    MS. ROSENFELD: The electronic screen.

    MR. GRESHAM: Can I add one more point I don't think we thought about, and I think it's important in this period of democracy, electronic machines are great marvels, they do wonderful things, it costs a lot to maintain, okay. They cost a lot to maintain.

    Montgomery County got a bill for $119,000 from the person doing their machines just for annual maintenance service.

    Now, I want you to think, you go down to Hocking County, you go down to Darke County, you go down to Allen County and you say you've got a $119,000 bill to maintain these machines, these people don't have the money.
Now, fundamentally there is a disconnect. The disconnect is elections are county managed, but they are statewide and federal in focus.

The most important election is the presidential election, but they don't give them any money. If the county commissioners don't come up with their money or state, HAVA is the first pot of money they've had in a while --

MS. ROSENFELD: -- Ever.

MR. GRESHAM: Ever. Fundamentally it's a disconnect. It's not seen as a national issue. It's seen as a county issue.

And when the dominoes roll they say, well, the county commissioners can decide what they want to do, but they've got a chicken here that's going to come home to roost. They have all of this technology, and if 50 percent of their machines go down what's going to happen? Who can afford to pay for this?

MS. ROSENFELD: Have any of you read in the Dispatch, and I don't know whether it's been in other papers around the state, Fairfield County has already said they need a 50 percent increase in their personnel in the office.

Now, this only means four people, but they only have eight, and they want four new people. And they need -- I forget how many tens of thousands of dollars for support for their new machines. And the county commissioners say, no, we don't have it.

And so I mean it's hitting right now. They need the support and they are getting these contracts, and they are -- they say we don't have the money, well, get it from your county commissioners. Well, where do you get it out of.

MS. WILLIS: And I don't remember ever hearing when we heard all of these pitches from these companies selling equipment about how expensive their service contracts would be.

So now we have counties like Fairfield who say we'll go out and hire our own repair technicians, but my question is we fought so hard to have secured equipment, and people working on equipment that knew what they were doing, if we go out and start hiring our own maintenance folks what does that do to the security of these pieces of equipment.

MR. DOSHI: The worry is they will not be heard.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Ms. Ramos.

MS. RAMOS: We've been hearing about all of the shortcomings of this bill, give me some idea, some solutions or something, recommendations you think could happen.

It seems like all we hear is what its shortcomings are.
And I want to clarify the military born overseas, you made a comment about them coming back, my understanding is those children born overseas have to apply when they are 18.

MS. ROSENFELD: No, no. If a parent was a U.S. citizen they are U.S. citizens.

MS. RAMOS: There is certain documentation they have to go through.

MS. ROSENFELD: They would have a birth certificate.

MS. RAMOS: At 18 they have to apply for certain -- Tom may know.

MR. ROGERS: People I know born overseas and come back when they turn 18, they have a choice which country they want to be a citizen of.

MS. ROSENFELD: I have two children, not anymore, who are dual citizens. My daughter lives in Canada, her children are American citizens, they have American passports and they are Canadian citizens.

Now, to get a passport for them, she had to go take their birth certificates and actually had to take them to get their passports.

MS. RAMOS: You do have to declare it at 18.

MS. ROSENFELD: They are dual citizens for life. They changed the law in the mid '90s. I think it was to allow dual citizens, because that was the law. I remember a college friend of mine who had to choose her citizenship when she became of age.

        MS. RAMOS: Anyway, like I said I just wonder what kinds of recommendations that you had. I heard she definitely -- Ms. Willis say she didn't like absentee ballots.
        I think for a lot of disabled that couldn't get around that would be -- excuse me, I've got allergies, I'm having a hard time. So there has got to be another way.
        Now, trying to make each place accommodating, I think is kind of different because we forget about some of the,
I guess, restrictions we have, you know. Polling places are also subject to who wants to have polling places.
        So sometimes that is a problem and I think one of our people here mentioned that the building can be old, but you have to go out and look for some of those, and the schools don't always want you in there, some churches don't want you in there, and you have to find places, because you can't own the buildings and have a place.
        MS. ROSENFELD: If it's a public building they have to allow it, public buildings by law have to allow you to have a polling place in there, which is schools.
        MR. GRESHAM: Libraries.
        MS. RAMOS: That's what I'm saying, give me some recommendations to some of the things you see as barriers, some recommendations of what could be done to overcome some of these shortcomings.

MR. GRESHAM: I'll start with the handicapped issue. House bill 312 that's making its way through the process now that will put more teeth into the question you just raised. We're debating that now and people are working on it.

HAVA still has some requirements saying you have to have accommodations, you have to do that. So somewhere between the reality of being on the ground in a town and the rules that's where we got to stand, we can't say otherwise.

Now, let me go to some of the other things. I want you to go back, in the other system you went to register to vote you had an ID or some documentation, you were on the rolls, you signed your signature. When you got to the election place all you had to do was sign your signature.

There could be some contests, you know, everybody does not sign their signature generally the same way. You got your piece of paper, you went over to the voting machine and voted, you walked out of the door.

Now, the best way to call it is it's becoming seemingly complex, and the dynamics of that is now what the police call a compressed 30 seconds, within that compressed 30 seconds a whole lot of things could go wrong, because now people will behave in certain ways.

So my solution to you quite clearly if you look at all of the things they put in place, I have to ask the fundamental question, do you want people to vote. And do you want them to vote in large numbers.

And when you do that analysis and extract that out backwards, based on what you have now, based on what has been legislated in House Bill 234 and House Bill 3, the fundamental question you have to ask, and we've asked this question, do you want it?

And you wouldn't want to know the answer that we got, you don't. You don't want to know what they said to us when we asked that question.

So there are things you can do. But now poll worker money, No. 1 on my list, training for poll workers. Second thing is even with the new rules let everybody know, put it on television, put it on radio, put in the newspaper.

You know 90 days out nobody should be surprised that within that 35 day window you have to register to vote. They should not be surprised about any of the requirements. It's an educational program.

Now, what we've decided to do as a good government organization, is to put educational programs together, because if the government won't do it we have to do it. We have to find ways.

As the League of Women Voters, as AXIS, as Common Cause, to put educational programs in these communities, so people, particularly poor people, particularly disenfranchised people, they are the least ones to get it.

You have to put those educational programs in place. If I can do two things, give poll workers, give Franklin County, give Cuyahoga County money to train their poll workers, I won't change the rules. And give them marketing and media money, those are two things I would ask, because I can't change the law.

MS. ZEALEY: Would you also include as part of your recommendation to increase the number of poll workers at the location where there's been high turnout in the past?

MR. GRESHAM: Yes. Mr. Rogers, you may have been joking, certain places I think you better put police officers, you may have situations out there that may potentially blow up.

MS. ZEALEY: Ms. Rosenfeld, my father is in the precise situation that your mother was prior to her demise, and I fear that as someone who is both elderly and disabled, he's wheelchair bound, that he will not be able to vote unless we obtain the state identification.
He was denied the right to vote in Alabama as a graduate student many, many years ago, he's 93 now, by a literacy test, they asked a question what is meant by in fee tail --

MR. GRESHAM: -- What is that?

MS. ZEALEY: It's a very legalistic archaic real estate term.

MR. GRESHAM: I've never heard it. We all failed that.

MS. ZEALEY: I've been a lawyer for 21 years and I've seen it probably three times in my entire career. But he was denied the right to vote, and he was born in Georgia where they didn't issue birth certificates for African Americans in 1913.

So if he was denied the right to vote in 2006, it's not so much that I fear for someone else's safety, I fear he wouldn't survive it, because he would be so enraged that he might keel over.

And so I want to do what I can to prevent the situation where senior citizens and disabled persons of Ohio cannot exercise their right to vote.

So he has no bills, he has -- his driver's license is expired. He cannot attach anything that you mentioned to his absentee ballot, which he's typically filled
So how do citizens that fall into his category do anything other than get a state identification, if they can get that?

MS. ROSENFIELD: Oh, well, my favorite one, the alternative is a bank statement. Are you real keen to send a xeroxed copy of your bank statement to the Board of Elections with your name, address, how much money you have in the bank and name of the bank and the account number. Anything else you'd like to have?

MS. ZEALEY: I guarantee you my father would never do that.

MS. ROSENFIELD: I hope not. This bill has been very bad for my blood pressure.

MS. WILLIS: We're not sure what other items people can take. It's probably going to take people trying to do this proffering that they can't do it, in order to show people this isn't right.

Because I think there are more of those people out there than they recognize. There are a lot of people who just don't have like your father appropriate documentation.

MS. ROSENFIELD: They can use the last four digits of their Social Security number, but then it's up to the Board as the earlier panel was saying, the Board of Elections then decides whether this matches with their voter registration, whether the Social Security number is on their voter registration.

Mine isn't, I've been registered in the same place for 40 years, no way I'd give them my Social Security number.

Would you ask your father if he wouldn't mind being a test case.

MS. ZEALEY: I know a good lawyer, too.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Mr. Wheeler.

MR. WHEELER: Mr. Chairman, thank you. You know, seems like just yesterday that people were being knocked down the stairs for the right to vote, and I can think of Reverend Fred Selsbrook right out of Cincinnati, so many sad cases, and here we are back in 2006 talking about the right to vote.

My concern at this time is those that are disabled. The -- I heard 1500 polling places, 1500. Now, that's just a guess I understand, estimate of where people might not be afforded the opportunity to go in and have the greatest right that they have as a citizen of this nation, is the right to vote.

Is there somebody that comes out monthly with some kind of chart or something that says we have done 50 more, we have 1450 more to go. Who's doing that? And if not, why not.

So that all of these people will have an entre' to vote, then we may as well be back in Alabama holding people out, because they had no way in, because they do not have accessibility.

MS. WILLIS: What I've been told, and I get told very little by that little group at the Secretary's office, is that every county board of elections took the checklist which our state made up, not the federal checklist, to their sites and measured and judged and sent back an approved list of their sites.

With ones that needed help they put down requests for funding to fix them, temporary fixes. My concern is did they do it right, is anybody checking up on it?

If they use something temporary -- this was the great case, I had a friend last year who went to a school to vote, she got there and big step at the door.

She got back home and called the Legal Rights Office who contacted the school, oh, we have a ramp but it's down in the basement, nobody put it out today.

Now, I mean, these are just not logical thinking people. So how do we know that they are doing it right, I'm not sure that they are.
And if they need more things done, why aren't we using that HAVA money that is sitting in a pot that was specifically addressed to be used for accessibility.

MR. WHEELER: Mr. Chairman, if I may, to the committee here, I think that's one thing that I would like to see on the agenda is where are we at with the 1500 places that the disabled are not to go, do not have entrance into.

That we might really look at that as apart of a new civil rights, because it's keeping people out. And I think that somebody should be reporting that to the public, because everybody deserves a right to vote.

And if it's within their county I think it's a county responsibility and state responsibility and a federal responsibility to afford people that greatest right of all.

So I wish that would be one concern that we would look at the disabled.

MS. RAMOS: I have one question. I want to address this, I know that the new machines most all of them are portable.

And my understanding was when they were getting the machines they would be able to be taken out, that's the reality of it was you could carry it out to the curb and let people vote, so you have not run into whether they've done that or not?
MS. WILLIS: I asked about that last week.

While that was a big selling point, in reality the Debolt machines can't be taken to the car.

The ES&S machines could be if they just took one and just left it as the only machine, I mean it couldn't be used in the room, it would have to be used strictly to take out to the cars.

So I asked the committee how many places in Ohio do you think were really going to do curb side voting, because you can't get in. He told me six in the entire state, he told me six. I just --

MS. RAMOS: Six machines?

MS. WILLIS: Six places, six voting places, that is all he knew about.

MR. GRESHAM: There are 11,000 voting places.

MS. WILLIS: That's all he knew about.

Because I was also asking if I need curb side voting how do I get someone's attention to bring me a machine, or how do I go about doing that.

And he said, well, we're going to put in little door bells. Now, I don't know where they are going to put these little door bells that I can reach from my car, but that was one of the answers, so that we don't have to move our equipment around, because our equipment, we'll have people lined up waiting to use it, we'll just bring out an optical scan to your car, that's the way we'll have to do it.

MS. ROSENFELD: They don't have optical scans?

MS. RAMOS: Electronic machine supposedly, they were going to be able to pick them up and --

MS. WILLIS: -- That's what we were told.

MS. ROSENFELD: -- go look at it when you go to vote --

MS. RAMOS: -- We used them -- we used them
-- I'm sorry, we used them portably at like the county fairs for people to try, so I know they were portable, but I just wanted to know how in reality they were used and maybe there aren't a lot of counties using them now.

MR. GRESHAM: You trigger something called chain of custody, which really becomes a legal problem. Where was that machine during the process of voting.

It really becomes a problem. Now, since you opened that door electronically the issue of chain of custody with the cartridges that come in from the electorate out in the ballot is an issue, but it's going to be a bigger issue in the future.

And it's going to be a bigger issue in the future because if I can magnetically hit that cartridge with something that changes the reading on that, I mean by going -- you know for everything you go into that's good there is an unattended consequence.

I can tell you stories, CDs, eight tracks, all of that kind of stuff really is going to be an issue as we get more technology involved in the process.

You know, people say you can do it retail, you can do a little retail manipulating on the voting system. But if you get it in electronic capacity you have wholesale capacity now of being able to wholesale change a whole lot of numbers, and in critical places you can do that.

There's advantages to technology, there are advantages to punch card from the standpoint of voter certainty.

What all of this does, these impediments, these newer pieces of equipment tend to reduce the number of people who want to participate, it's now too much work.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Mr. Doshi, I think you have the final question.

MR. DOSHI: Just that in answering to Chairman Wheeler was saying for 1500 polling stations that need to be upgraded, you mentioned there is about 1.4 million disabled, does that responsibility lie on our shoulders or some shoulders that they be brought into participation in this ing voting, whose responsibility is it? There are people who are eligible to vote, but they are simply not tuned in or plugged in the system?

That's a huge number, I'm shocked really of that many disabled people.

MS. ROSENFELD: I do know the National Voter Registration Act, Motor Voter, which is 10, 12 years old requires that every agency that provides services to people with disabilities must also provide voter registration services to the clients that they serve, and they are not doing it.

MS. WILLIS: No, they are not doing it.

And if often times they may have some registration forms somewhere in the office, no one knows where they are.

People are typically never asked, are you registered, that's why we were really wanting to talk to the agencies, the organizations, but then Peg brought up this.

MS. ROSENFELD: They are exempted from this.

MS. WILLIS: They are exempt, well, people are going to be afraid if they read that then.

MS. ROSENFELD: They are exempted very specifically, they are called designated agencies.

MS. WILLIS: I would think and I don't know how the system works, but even a letter from the Secretary of State's office as a reminder to all of these organizations, every county board, every agency, they should get a letter reminding them that this is apart of their duty and it's not being done.

MS. ROSENFIELD: And we know it's not done because they do have to report to the Secretary of State, I think it's every two years. And he in turn has to report to the now EAC in Washington, because they report to Congress, the effect of the law.

And one of the things they have to report is how many registrations they are getting county by county, agency by agency. And that report shows they are not getting any registrations from these agencies.

MS. WILLIS: And I can't make it strong enough that for people with disabilities any of these added activities, be it registration or something else adds that much more to what they are doing in their lives just to get through day by day.

I'm not making excuses, but I think oftentimes that people at the agencies, just voting goes on the back burner, because we got to get these people a job, we've got to get them health insurance, we've got to get them this and that, so they don't make it a priority.

MR. GRESHAM: I don't think you understood how profound your question was. In its narrow sense you're talking about one group, but in its broader sense we have a track record already.

As we introduce technology into the economic system, as we introduce it in the political system, as we introduce it into a culture, there are people instantly disenfranchised, instantly disenfranchised, because they don't have the capacity to manipulate the systems, they don't understand them.

Now, hopefully that will diminish as the population, civil rights generation gets older, some of us are afraid of computers, and maybe the youth.

But they have a problem, too, they don't have a high level of concentration. Young people who are technology oriented don't have a high level of concentration, they don't want to do anything that takes too long.

The politics of America has hijacked our democracy, the politics of America. And separate those two, because democracy has ideas, the politics is where the guts and this thing, how it really operates.

But the ability to win, the manipulating the system has made democracy for some people a sham. And for us ideally as a psyche we're going to have to deal with this, because we go off to the foreign countries and say, hey, look at us, 29 percent of the people vote, all of these rules people have to do, those that want to vote.

I think our psyche, our own comfort level of our own propaganda is going to have to say inside of us we have to check that.

Now, we made that decision. All of these people on this side of the table made that decision. We want this thing to stand for what it really is, and for it to be what it should be for everybody that's why we're over here. We could be making money doing all sorts of other things.

The point becomes if you can do one thing begin to chip away at this naive idea that our democracy is perfect and it works for everybody at the highest level.

In fact they are making it worse for a whole group of people. Look at what computers have done to disenfranchise people, if we introduce that technology into our democratic process it's doing the same thing to a degree if we're not conscience. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: We really appreciate your testimony on the panel, it's been very enlightening, practical examples and illustrations particularly.

And with that, we will close this portion of our hearing this afternoon and thank you very much.

David, do we have members of the public?
DR. MUSSATT: Yes.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Give us a minute to change up then you can come forward.

(Brief recess taken.)

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Public session now convenes.

We are back together as a committee. Is this joint testimony or just one?

MR. WRIGHT: I didn't know he was going to say anything.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: One at a time. If you would limit your remarks to five minutes each that would be appreciated. If you would state your full name and spell it for the record that would be also appreciated.

MR. WRIGHT: Stewart Wright, S-T-E-W-A-R-T, W-R-I-G-H-T. I live here in Columbus. I'm particularly concerned about the registration process and statewide registration system, and I wanted to make you aware of some publications I just downloaded from the internet.

Those of you going home tonight might be able to look them up on the internet. I have one copy of each and maybe people from out of town I can leave these with them and pass them around tonight if you don't have anything to do, and then you'd have some good questions to ask from the Secretary of State's office.

This one vote comes from the Brennan Center for Justice, New York University, in New York.

MR. DOSHI: What's the web site?

And the title of this publication is making the list and it's just issued, it's copyrighted 2006. And what they did was they surveyed all 50 Secretary of State offices, and compiled the information about how they do these, what do you do with the four digits of the Social Security number, and what do you do with the driver's license number that we're asking for, and is specified in HAVA.

What they find is that some states are using them to try to make voting easier, and they say some states are trying to make voting harder.

If you ask which is Ohio, I think they will say they don't know, because this report from the same place --

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: -- Sir, would you pull the microphone closer and speak into it.

MR. WRIGHT: -- Here's a report from the same place from Ohio, and for a lot of the questions it says we didn't get a response. And so this would be easy to print out, it's only four pages.
The last is the voter registration form, so there are three pages of information and references, you can go elsewhere.

Then the other thing I have is from the U.S. Public Policy Committee of the Association for Computing Machinery. And the title of that is Statewide Data Base of Registered Voters, Study of Accuracy, Privacy, Usability, Security and Reliability Issues.

And it I'm afraid does not have numbered pages, but it's fewer than ten, I think. And I think they have some very good requirements we should ask about. Could I leave these with one of you?

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: David.

MR. WRIGHT: Can you circulate to as many as possible. I will try to come back tomorrow and will make some copies.

DR. MUSSATT: Do you have an electronic version if I e-mail you?

MR. WRIGHT: At the bottom is my e-mail address.

DR. MUSSATT: We usually communicate electronically, I can probably get it that way the best.

MR. WRIGHT: Could I have your e-mail address?
DR. MUSSATT: Sure.

MR. WRIGHT: I think I'm done.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Thank you, Mr. Wright. Sir.

MR. FRY: I'm Phil Fry.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Spell it for us.

MR. FRY: P-H-I-L, Fry, F-R-Y. I'm with a citizen action group called CASE, Citizens Alliance for Secured Elections.

And I'm not sure what you wanted to be doing with the information you collect from here. I wanted you to know that we have -- we contact our members routinely through a Yahoo group.

If there is something that can be done where you would like activists involved, we can reach a hundred to 200 people pretty quick. And we're not organized in a traditional way, we're a loose affiliation of activists.

That means we're a herd of cats, but a lot of them are very, very dedicated and they are spread throughout the state and through other states, and are doing a lot of good work here and there.

So if -- and it's actually four groups in Ohio, CASE; and a group called J30, up in Cleveland, Ohio; Vigilance, another one in greater Cleveland, coalition for something, I don't remember the name.

But we want to help, and if through this effort you come up with something where you can use activists, we want to help with that.

Second thing I wanted to say was I sent out a survey question to all of the boards of elections a couple of weeks ago. I'm keeping it really simple, two questions; what's your budget?

I see the budgets going up in some counties, especially with the new equipment, being surprised at some of these people. And I just wanted to see what was happening.

And the other question I had didn't relate to that, but it was about they are supposed to be posting the results of the elections at the precincts. So I was asking them if they were -- so I've only gotten back about 20 replies about the budget.

And I've got two or three people in there who don't have a budget for 2006. And several who don't have a budget for 2008, or the programming may be a five percent increase for 2008.

So, in other words, and some may be decreased, I don't know how they are doing that. But what I can tell you from this is the counties don't know, they are not analyzing the system, they don't know what's going to happen, they are not able to plan for it.

And so I think that in addition to all of the process problems we've talked about, there is a lot of other infrastructure problems that are right there, and we're not seeing them yet, but they are going to be there.

The third thing I wanted to say, the last thing, is a little more complicated, but it has to do with the mentality of elections.

And it was something that I'd like to get across to our legislators and Boards of Elections and I think in an abstract sense they appreciate it, but in a practical sense they don't.

And before, I've got a master's degree in physics, I've worked in that area, I've done a lot of analysis of all kinds of things.

What you do in physics or any kind of thing like that, you have a situation and you have a new variable you're throwing into it, you don't know how it's going to affect the overall picture.

Well, the easiest thing to do is to look at it and look at it and say look at extremes, look at this end and look at it from the other end and sometimes you can tell a lot from that.

Well, if you look at the cost of doing a recount, which was $10 and went to $50 a precinct, if you look at that as the answer, you say what happens if we raise it to $10,000.
Well, nobody would ever do a recount, nobody could afford it. And that would give elections officials all kinds of reasons to not worry about things, because there is not going to be a recount.
If you did it the other way, you put it back to zero and said you can have recount on demand, what would that do? Well, they looked at me like I'm a nut, but I really suggested that.
Because what that means is boards of elections could not possibly afford to have a recount, they can't turn around every time somebody wants a recount and do it.
They have to have the process of counting votes very transparent, very diligent and very open so that everybody knew exactly what was going on and was comfortable with it.
It would have to include an audit process. When it got done people would say I'm not asking for a recount I just saw everything that happened, it was all transparent.
So I advocate that the recounts should be doubled, I think it would solve a lot of problems. Nobody is going to do that. But I still think that's how we need to think, and that's all I've got.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Thank you very much for your testimony.

Let me also mention to you that you and the members of your group can write to us through the Chicago office, and the record of this meeting will be held open until April the 1st, so you don't have to limit your testimony to this time and place, they can add to your testimony and send it to Chicago.

MR. FRY: I'll do that.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Thank you very much for your time.

MR. FRY: Thank you.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Any other testimony?

(No response.)

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: We stand adjourned until tomorrow morning.

(Thereupon the hearing adjourned at 5:08 p.m.)

PROCEDINGS

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Good morning, everyone.

This meeting of the Ohio Advisory Committee to the U.S.
Commission on Civil Rights will come to order.

For the benefit of those of you who are in the audience I'll introduce myself and my colleagues.

First, my name is Lynwood Battle, and I'm from Cincinnati and am chairperson of the Advisory Committee.

Members of the committee who are with me from the right, and then the names of the members from my right are Tom Rogers; Roberta Presley; Jad Humeidan; Dilip Doshi; Cassandra Bledsoe; Aaron Wheeler; Sharon Zealey; Grace Ramos; James Francis; Diane Citrino.

And we are all very happy to be here in Columbus,
Ohio for these hearings.

Also with us are David Mussatt, the Civil Rights Analyst of the Midwestern Region. And Carolyn Allen, the administrative assistant.

And I'd like to also introduce and express gratitude to G. Michael Payton, the Executive Director of the Ohio Civil Rights Commission, and Pastor Aaron Wheeler, who is seated to my left, who chairs that commission, for their hospitality. We appreciate very much their willingness to host this meeting and admire the hard work that they do and their staff has done in coordinating the meeting, in particular the logistics with our regional staff.

In addition, we had in attendance yesterday and again today with us Leonard Hubert, from the senior staff of Governor Taft. And we certainly appreciate his work and the fact that he has been with us from gavel to gavel.

We are here to conduct a briefing for the purpose of gathering information on voting access in Ohio. In addition to studying the voting issues in the state, the jurisdiction of this committee includes discrimination or denial of equal protection of the laws because of race, color, religion, sex, age, disability or national origin, or in the administration of justice.

Information that relates to the topic of this meeting will be especially helpful to this Advisory Committee. Proceedings of the meeting, which are being recorded by a public stenographer, Cheryl Edwards, will be sent to the commission for its advice and consideration.

The advisory committee may also decide to investigate a subject further and issue a report on the topic.

At the outset I would like to remind everyone of the ground rules.

This is a public meeting open to the media and the general public. We have a full schedule of people who will be making presentations within the limited time we have available.

The time allotted for each presentation must be rather strictly adhered to. This will include a presentation by each participant, followed by questions from committee members.

To accommodate persons who have not been invited, but wish to make statements, we've scheduled an open period today beginning at 11:45 -- correction, today at 12:30. Anyone wishing to make a statement during that period should contact David Mussatt for that schedule.

Written statements may also be submitted to the committee members or staff here today, or by mail to the U.S.
Commission on Civil Rights in Chicago, Illinois.

The record of this meeting will close on April the 1st.

Though some of the statements today may be controversial, we want to ensure that all invited guests do not defame or degrade any person or organization.

And in order to ensure that all aspects of the issues are represented, knowledgeable persons having a wide variety of experience and viewpoints have been invited to share this information with us.

Any person or any organization who feels that they have been defamed or degraded by statements made in these proceedings should contact our staff during this meeting, so that we may provide a chance for a public response.

Alternately, such persons or organizations can file written statements for inclusion in the proceedings.

I urge all persons making presentations to be judicious in their statements. The Advisory Committee does appreciate the willingness of all participants to share their views and experiences with this committee.

Our first panel this morning is composed of Cassandra Hicks, who is from the office of the Secretary of State, I believe General Counsel. Jeff Jacobson, a state Senator from Ohio. And Aaron Ockerman, of State Street Consultants.

So we will begin with Ms. Hicks from the Secretary of State's office.

MS. HICKS: Thank you very much. Good morning to everyone, members of the committee and guests.

I'm here as the general counsel for the Ohio Secretary of State, J. Kenneth Blackwell. And I'm honored to be here to give you some information regarding Ohio's important role in voter education, voter registration and implementation of the Help America Vote Act.

I'm going to give you a brief outline of information and I've provided packets for members of the committee to view, which contain information on Ohio's current standards for applying the Help America Vote Act to procedures, which have to be transitioned in Ohio for compliance by May 2nd, which is Ohio's first federal election in 2006.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Ms. Hicks, if I could interrupt you for one second, I did forget one thing. For those of you who will have written statements this morning, if you would kindly speak directly into the microphone and slowly read your statement, because it is being recorded for the record, and would be very helpful to Cheryl if she does not have to go blazing through the rescitations.

MS. HICKS: Okay. Thank you very much, and I will make sure Cheryl does not have too difficult a time with my information.

I'm here representing Secretary of State J.
Kenneth Blackwell, as I indicated, to provide you some information on where Ohio currently is in implementation of the Help America Vote Act.

As a result of the challenges faced in the General Election of 2000, Congress approved and President Bush signed into law on October 29th, 2002, the Help America Vote Act. The acronym that is used to describe the Act is called HAVA, for Help America Vote Act.

This legislation creates federal funding and guidelines with the states to replace punch cards and lever operated voting equipment with electronic machines that would more accurately reflect the intention of the voter.

In addition, HAVA requires that the states provide for a centralized statewide voter registration data base, in order to prevent voter fraud, and more easily manage changes required to keep the voter registration information current.

HAVA also provides grant funding opportunities to improve accessibility for the disabled at polling locations, and to increase voter education on a local level.

Each of these requirements has a fulfillment deadline and a penalty associated with it if compliance is not met. All funds released to the state by the federal government under HAVA are subject to an annual audit.

In addition, the grant funds assessed by Ohio counties are subject to monitoring by the Ohio Secretary of State, through an internal audit mechanism.

HAVA also establishes guidelines for provisional voting options used in situations where a voter's name is not on the polling location poll book in the county which they reside.

The offering of a provisional ballot to any voter who requests one ensures that any eligible voter is not denied the opportunity to vote.

However, poll workers are required to inform the voter if he or she is not in the correct precinct to cast the provisional ballot. For the provisional ballot to count it must be cast in the correct precincts where the voter resides.

The U.S. Department of Justice has granted the authority to enforce the provisions of HAVA. And to review and determine what penalties, if any, will be enforced for a state's failure to meet HAVA deadlines.

At least currently 50 percent of the states were in compliance with HAVA's schedule as of January 1st, 2006.

Compliance requirements are dependent upon the state's first federal election in 2006. Some of the reasons that have prevented certain states from getting into compliance include a lengthy process for determining the vendors who would supply voting equipment; the time it takes to manufacture large numbers of voting equipment; possible cumbersome procedural requirements at the local and county level; and some counties or states may have not met requirements to receive federal funding; and because of the expense involved in the transition to electronic equipment most states are requiring the use of federal funding in order to implement HAVA.

The Department of Justice is required to consider reasons for non-compliance, along with a state's detailed plan and time line on achieving compliance prior to enforcing any sanctions against the state for failure to comply with HAVA deadlines.

The Ohio Secretary of State began an implementation program and time line to meet HAVA designated goals soon after the Act was passed in 2002.

The first step in analyzing the requirements was to determine how the state could obtain HAVA funding. The office immediately created teams to work on specific areas, such as HAVA Funding; determination of equipment suppliers for voting machines; and also the establishment of the first statewide voter registration data base, based upon utilization of county records into a centralized data base accessible by the SOS, or the Secretary of State's office.

Much of that work was completed during the first quarter 2002, and completed finally for determination of HAVA compliance by review and audit of our office in 2005.

The Secretary of State's office uses an RFP system, or Request For Proposal, in determining what vendors would be eligible to comply with requirements for selections of voting equipment.
The State of Ohio submitted its first state plan to the 2000 Election Commission by 2003. By the third quarter of 2003 RFPs were being reviewed and narrowed down to a group of four contenders for voting machine equipment.

Contracts were initially drafted after the RFP process was initially completed. And by early 2004 the Secretary of State had three vendors who were committed to contractual obligations to provide voting equipment for the Secretary of State's office.

In this manner we introduced a process of determining how we would have voting equipment included along with voter education, poll worker training, election supplies, and a voter education program that would be complete before the first election in 2006. This was included within the pricing structure established for contracts for vendors.

The pricing and services agreement, negotiations resulted in the most comprehensive package of voting machine services and equipment developed by any state to date, with the lowest prices in the nation for DRE, or direct recording devices, machines which are normally known as touch screen voting devices.

Around this time the legislature was considering the option of also having a paper receipt for each voter to have a guarantee as to how his vote was recorded electronically by the machine.

House Bill 262, which became effective May 7th of 2004, required that Ohio's voting machines would have a voter verified paper audit trail.

And of course the government, we like acronyms, so we have the acronym for that as VVPAT, Voter Verified Paper Audit Trail.

Another round of negotiations with the vendors who were supplying voter equipment was necessary in order to comply with this legislation for the VVPAT.

Eventually amendments to the original contract for voting equipment were completed to include the VVPAT and an additional piece of equipment utilized as a printer to be utilized for voting equipment for the 2006 elections.

All approved vendors received their certification for their voting machines and VVPAT devices on both the federal and state level in 2005.

In 2005 as well HAVA funds were released to purchase the new voting machines. In addition, there was some separate steps established because of many concerns regarding the use of electronic voting machines.

The Secretary established three separate procedures to review administrative tasks associated with the administration of the election, and to mitigate possible voting equipment systems or technology issues arising from the use of new technology.

The procedures were designed to enhance the ability of election procedures to address particular equipment, possible malfunctions, and to identify any risk factors, which could be eliminated or diminished with technical or administrative action on the part of an election official.

An additional system which our office created is called IV&V, Independent Verification and Validation.

This new system was not only to verify election procedures, but also to verify that the equipment functioned as warranted by the manufacturer and suppliers of the new machines.

The IV&V process began in the summer of 2005, and is continuing and will be completed prior to the May primary, 2006.

This process involves our office contracting with independent technical consultants not associated with the equipment or the state to validate the functions of the new machines.

In addition, in 2005 the Secretary of State's office was able to complete the centralized voter registration data base in Ohio. Therefore, that component of HAVA requirement was met by December 9th, 2005.

In addition to voting machines and the voter registration data base, county boards of elections also had the ability to apply for grant funding to the Secretary of State in order to improve accessibility for voters who are disabled at polling places.

These funds have been available for fiscal years 2003, '04, and '05. The amount of the funds are determined by the Secretary of Health and Human Services at the federal level.
The process included counties providing a plan for improvement for facilities that were not accessible to the handicapped. This stipulation that a permanent fix at a private facility could not be approved as part of the process was utilized as part of the grant project in the event that a private facility elected not to be a polling place at some point in the future.

But temporary or semi-permanent fixes can be done at private facilities. Many of the improvements were temporary or a portable nature, something that could be used on voting day and put in storage afterwards by the elections officials.

Funds are also available for the boards of elections to train election officials and poll workers and volunteers in requirements for accessibility for voting by individuals with disabilities.

At this time 14 counties have utilized funding available in this program. After 2005 we have had other issues relating to provisional voting, as well as absentee voting.

As a result there is now additional legislation where we have bills in Congress as well trying to amend the other state's requirements for HAVA to include a VVPAT.

At this point at least 39 states have enacted or have pending legislation on this subject.

In Ohio the subject of absentee voting has come up and again in 2006. As a result we have House Bill 234, which became effective January 27th, 2006, which has made some significant changes in the area relative to absentee voting.

Electors no longer have to state a reason to vote absentee. However, there are more stringent requirements in the application process. There are nine pieces of mandatory information that are required before the absentee ballot can be issued.

If any of the nine pieces of information are not within the absentee ballot information, Boards of elections officials are required to notify the applicant for an absentee ballot of the missing information.

Additionally, new sections in the law allow most absentee voters to cast a second ballot provisionally in their precinct polling places on election day.

As a result the Board must determine prior to counting absentee ballots which ballot will be counted, the absentee one, or the provisional one.

Because of new procedures affecting absentee ballots, the Board can defer counting absentee ballots until the official canvas, and by doing so this will provide them additional time to determine which absentee ballots are eligible to be counted.

Because of significant election official concerns on the subject of issuing and counting absentee ballots, as well as new procedures to cast provisional ballots on election day, another piece of legislation was amended as well, and created another bill, amended Substitute House Bill 3, which has some provisions that are effective in May, and other provisions effective June 1st, 2006.

One example that will affect both elections forthcoming is the processing and counting valid absentee ballots prior to the close of the polls, this is now permissible.

Amended Substitute House Bill 3, also addresses a requirement and definition for photo identification when appearing at the polls to vote.

As you can see, the process of reviewing Ohio's election and voter registration provisional balloting and absentee balloting laws may not be done.

At this point part of the Secretary of State's responsibility is to notify county officials who must implement these new changes of these requirements and to assist them with training poll workers and election officials to ensure that voters are properly educated on the new laws as they come into effect.

We appreciate the hard work that is done at the county level by our poll workers, the bipartisan teams of persons who must work together really throughout the year, and not just on election day, to make sure that we have fair impartial and efficient elections in Ohio.

The Secretary of State's Office has tried to provide a guide post to comply with federal requirements, as well as state requirements. And in addition has as its utmost obligation, to make sure that elections in Ohio are fair, and equitable and that voters' votes count.

We believe we do an admirable job in this process, in conjunction with our county officials and are happy and proud to continue the work of the Secretary of State.

Thank you very much.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Thank you, Ms. Hicks.

Next speaker on our panel is State Senator Jeff Jacobson.

SENATOR JACOBSON: Thank you. My name is Jeff Jacobson, I represent the Dayton area. And at the outset
I'm happy to note two of my friends from our community are here, and I'm glad to have them as part of the Advisory Commission here today.

I've been in the General Assembly for 14 years and served four of those years as chair of the Elections Committee of the House.

I was also on the elections study committee that in 2001 recommended against converting from punch cards to DREs. Was also primary instigator and a member of the Joint Committee on Ballot Security that did adopt if not the first, one of the first in the nation, a requirement that DREs contain a paper audit trail.

It was a bipartisan effort strongly resisted, it should be noted by the Secretary of State's office. But we have generally been happy with the way that it's worked out since then.

I've also served as a member of the Montgomery County Board of Elections.

I would just like to back up and say how did -- to address how did the General Assembly arrive at the point we did this two year period, and especially this year in adopting the changes to Ohio law that were adopted in House Bill 3.

And I'd like to start out by going back to 2000 when I believe there was unjustifiable and I think manufactured complaints about punch cards. We here in Ohio have had them and worked with them successfully.

In fact, Mr. Francis will remember the very closely contested election for Dayton Mayor back in ’93, where we actually did go in as both parties, it was a 200 vote margin.

We went back, both parties together and reviewed one precinct where we held it up and looked for hanging chads, and we found only one change and we did not disagree one time between the observers from both campaigns.

And at the conclusion after looking at that one precinct the decision was made by those contesting the outcome of the election that the punch cards had worked and they were not likely to find significant changes in voting by continuing the process, and the process was discontinued.

We also had a statewide election decided in 1990 by 1,234 votes on punch cards, for nearly all of it without either side suggesting that in any way our ballots were not appropriately recording people’s views.

That is frankly why I resisted and others the change over to DREs. However, that decision was made in part by the decisions at the federal level on HAVA.

Update and fast forward to the 2004 election, and there were a lot of pressures on the system. And I think the credit for making the system work so well in Ohio goes to our bipartisan boards of elections.

And to the extent to which you all have not had direct observation contact with the way boards of elections do their work, I would tell you that the things that you heard about how Ohio's election, quote, might have been stolen, are completely and utterly fictitious, and I think a disgrace to our national body politic the fact that so much effort has gone into promoting this myth.

And I will say this, they essentially for one main reason, although I could go on for quite a long time, the one main reason is the boards of elections have equal numbers of Democrats and Republicans.

What they mostly do is watch each other, perhaps they don't watch each other when they go to the facilities on their own, but short of that if one is touching a ballot there is someone else watching the ballot. If a Republican goes over in a corner a Democrat wants to know why, if not being assigned to them directly.

It works, it's interesting, it's almost like the old doctor of mutual destruction, both sides knows the other is watching, so neither tries.

I'm not saying they would try, but even if they were tempted to try no one tries, because they know they are under a microscope the entire time.

And anyone who suggests to you otherwise at a minimum is insulting the Democrats who work at the Board of Elections to suggest they would have been party to allowing the Republicans under their noses to steal an election, and I think it's a disgrace.

And frankly that's why you see no leaders of the Democratic party joining in the condemnation, because they appoint through the Secretary of State's office the members of the Board.

And then the members of the Board appoint the Democrats and Republicans that work there.

Despite the positive work of our Boards of elections they were strained tremendously by very real voter fraud that happened in Ohio.

And while you have heard that there were only four instances of proven voter fraud of casting ballots, there were thousands of instances of fraudulent registrations that were caught by local boards of elections, that were caught by, you know, turned over by investigators or prosecutors.

I could provide you with documentation and citations to the number of articles that appeared, and there were unfortunately to say three major actors in that.

The first was ACORN, Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now, which submitted blatantly false registrations in a number of counties, and additionally deprived 500 voters, more than 500 voters of their right to vote in the 2004 election by failing to turn in their cards at all until after the deadline in October.

In addition to that, The Americas Coming Together was equally implicated in registrations, including among some 1,284 suspicious voter applications in Cuyahoga County, they registered a Jive Turkey, Sr.

There was also a number of instances connected to the NAACP National Voter Fund. But what's important to say here is a lot of this was caught.

And what you need to ask yourself and what we need to ask ourselves is, okay, these were caught. Registering Dick Tracy, George Foreman, Jeffrey Dahmer, Mary Poppins might be obvious enough that somebody might say, wait a minute, is this really registration or registering the same person at, you know, dozens of different addresses has happened, might be something that appears to be fraudulent and would allow someone to pull it and look further.

Should the fact that the boards were diligent and caught these kinds of instances and turned them over to prosecutors cause all of us to say, that's great they got all of the problem.
Is it possible in government work that we are a hundred percent fool proof. Change the name from Jeffrey Dahmer to Jeffrey Jacobson, and one could possibly throw that registration to each of 88 counties without anybody batting an eyelash.

And I think that was our fear that not all registrations that may be fraudulent were done in such an easy to detect manner.

Now, at this point I would say they aren't all necessarily attempts to defraud the system. I think frankly the fact that we pay by the signature, and by the registration card, we allow that as a method of payment, encourages those who are incentivized to provide more registration cards, perhaps to do so without actually contacting real voters to do it. I'm not saying all do it, but clearly quite a few did.

And they seem to be connected with voter registration drives that paid by the card or by the signature. If they had been paid by the hour I would have had no problem, and I think you could have said, please, work a hundred hours, here's our expectation of you, and I think here's how much you make and I think you would have had fewer cards that would have had problems.

But in any case, we tried to change the law in that the Secretary of State in his capacity, his group that is trying to put a ballot amendment out, took us to court and actually succeeded in obtaining a temporary restraining order, which I think permitted fraud to continue to happen.

I'm disappointed the case is not decided and is yet pending.

We went forward, though, and in the context of the bills that we considered, and the suggestion we considered for election reform had to ask the question, what do you do with voter registration irregularities.

And frankly you can't ask people to show up once and prove who they are when they register, so that they can come back a second time to vote.

Now, sometimes people register at a government office, you see them right in front of you, other times you don't.

We didn't want to stop people from having the opportunity to register in the easiest way possible. But we wanted to make sure that they were actually real voters, and that they really were voting one time.

The best way to do that we felt was to require voter identification.

The idea of voter identification is not ours, it belongs properly to the members of Congress that in a bipartisan fashion voted for the Help America Vote Act.
In that bill they required for the first time new registrants who are voting the first time to show up and provide identification.

Democrats and Republicans both felt that some voters should not be able to cast their ballot without first producing evidence that they are who they claim to be.

That passed in a bipartisan fashion without the objections that said people will be disenfranchised. So if it's good enough for some voters the extension to all voters should not be seen as unprecedented or improper or outrageous as it has been suggested.

And in fact Ohio's permissible identification forms goes beyond those provided in the HAVA law for first time registrants.

HAVA only allows certain kinds of identification, copies of bank statements, utility bills, government checks, pay checks.

And we also went further and we allowed that you could do it, you could provide evidence of your Social Security number without producing documentary evidence.

So for example if you're someone who knows the last four digits, or you can look at your card and tell people the last four digits, but you don't have anything with your address on it, you can use that number to allow your ballot to be verified and counted.

We believe that our system will survive court scrutiny. The Georgia one that has been overturned by their -- by a local or district Federal court only allowed picture photo ID that's it.

They did not allow non photo ID with address or -- excuse me, government ID with address, but not photos, they did not allow current utility bills or bank statements or the like, you know.

Those who get Social Security checks or letters from Social Security, things like that, all of those things permissible by us are not permissible in Georgia. We do believe that ours is better.

We did our best to make it as free and open as possible, but still to ensure that those who register are real and those who vote, vote only one time.

Because it is fair to say that someone who votes twice or votes illegally harms the civil rights of those who vote correctly and once.

In addition I think it's important to mention that the Carter Baker Commission headed by Jimmy Carter, former president, and Jim Baker, former Secretary of State, bipartisan effort, endorsed the idea of voter identification last year and provided major impetus as well to our efforts.
In addition to the work we did here, there were a number of other important things that we did in the context of House Bill 3. I would be happy to discuss them further if people have questions, and I'm sure members will.

The one thing I would like to say is a disappointment that I have, the State provided five million dollars in appropriations for poll worker training and voter education, this was provided in 2003, by the decision that we made -- as part of the decision that we made on adopting paper trails.

Because of the decision to adopt paper trails it delayed the implementation of the direct recording electronic devices.

Meaning that I think originally that the Secretary of State was hoping to have those available for the 2004 election, but it took until sometime about a year ago before machines were available and certifiable that would have allowed the use of direct touch screen voting, and the removal of the punch card machines.

That's when the money was needed. The money was needed to educate voters not how to use a punch card, not how to be happy about their ballots, but how to work with the new machines.

For example, I have heard that those who have started working on new election equipment in early elections this year, and you may, some of you may have experienced this, each time a new voter comes in a member of the polling team, those working at the poll worker team, will take the individual over and explain to him how to vote.

That would be a good subject, would have been a good subject for voter education funds to be used for.

Unfortunately the voter education funds were spent for the most part in 2004 before we had made any conversion.

They were spent on commercials that I think were more designed to promote the candidacy or future candidacy of our Secretary of State, than they were to educate voters about anything important to voters.

There was absolutely no call for the spending of that money in 2004. And I would tell you that if you look at Ohio's profile, and I have information should you wish it from the Legislative Service Commission, Ohio spent more than Pennsylvania on voter ads.

And no other state that is comparable to ours spent a penny of their HAVA funds that we can tell on television advertising that was designed, quote unquote, to educate voters.

Florida, Georgia, Illinois and Michigan -- we have no information returned from Illinois, but Michigan spent not one penny on this.

Florida did not track the data specifically, but we are not aware of any. We looked through, done our own research, and Michigan said they did not use any, Georgia did not use any.

Even if it were to be used on television advertising, now when people are faced with new machines and new rules, it should have been safe for now.

And unfortunately to our disappointment it was used in the process at that time when there was nothing new about which voters should have been educated about. That to me is something that the commission should be aware of.

With that I'm happy to delve into any details the commission is interested in, and to answer any questions you may have.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Thank you, sir. Mr.
Ockerman.

MR. OCKERMAN: Chairman Battle, and members of the Ohio Advisory Committee.

My name is Aaron Ockerman, as has been noted, and I am the legislative agent for the Ohio Association of Election Officials, or OAEO, which as Senator Jacobson noted, is a bipartisan organization which represents Ohio's 88 county boards of elections.

In my capacity I represent the OAE0 before the Ohio General Assembly on all legislation affecting elections.
And over the past five years I have lobbied over 50 pieces of legislation before the Ohio General Assembly, none of them being more important than House Bill 3 from the 126th General Assembly.

My goal today is to discuss a little bit of the history of H.B. 3 you've now heard quite a bit about, hopefully outline some of the more important aspects of the bill, make you aware of the OAE0's involvement in the legislation, and try to answer any questions that you may have.

I hope you find the information useful as you ask questions about the conduct of elections here in Ohio.

House Bill 3 was introduced on January 24th, 2005 and sponsored by Representative Kevin DeWine, a Republican from Fairborn, Ohio.

It's also worth noting that a companion piece of legislation, Senate Bill 3, was introduced by Senator Kevin Coughlin, a Republican from Cuyahoga, Falls on that same day.
And has been noted before by other panelists, House Bill 3 was a relatively small piece of legislation, as introduced largely geared towards assisting Ohio in changing its laws to better reflect the Help America Vote Act. And part of it was to help address some problems that arose out of the 2004 election.

But as it was introduced as its been noted, it was about 22 pages long, it dealt with a couple of areas, the first was procedures for casting and counting provisional ballots, which has been a subject for discussion for this committee.

One thing of importance to note is that it codified what constitutes a vote for optical scan voting technology.

And I know yesterday you were all shown an optical scan ballot and the question was kind of posed what do you do if someone circles a name, as opposed to filling in the oval? What do you do if someone puts an "x" or check mark or writes yes next to a candidate.

House Bill 3 clarified how those votes are to be handled. For years that was done by the Secretary of State through directive. The legislature basically codified that, put into state law the procedures for counting those optical scan ballots. They did a similar thing several years ago for punch cards in Ohio.

And we think that was a very positive step in House Bill 3 to help clarify for the public and election officials what constitutes a vote on that technology.
It also required election officials to post certain information at the polling location, that was also part of the Help America Vote Act.

It codified the fact that there would be a statewide voter registration data base that has also been discussed here.

It codified, as Senator Jacobson noted, the requirement that was outlined in HAVA, that first time mail registrants provide certain identification when they show up to vote.

It updated the amount of money that a county can recoup for a non-automatic recount, and I'll get into that a little bit later.

And it also defined jurisdiction for purposes of Ohio elections as the precinct within which a voter lives, as opposed to a county, as has been suggested here as well.

So that was all of the as introduced version of House Bill 3.

And although that bill as introduced was not without controversy, it certainly would take on quite a bit more, add a little meat to the bones as it went through the committee process.

By the time the bill left the House Elections Committee, it had gone from 22 pages to 374 pages and now included numerous changes to voter registration, the elections calendar and campaign finance amongst other things.

While our association did not support a hundred percent of these changes, there were several in this version that I think deserve recognition here as they pertain to access to the polls.

One of the things that was discussed yesterday was the new requirement that voters receive notification in the mail telling them about the location of their precincts, providing them with other information as to the election dates.

It did remove challengers from the polling locations, that was a big problem as has been noted here in Ohio in 2004.

We worked very closely with the General Assembly to try to have those challengers removed and replaced them with observers.

So now political parties or candidates or folks interested in election can register with their board of elections to observe an election at a polling location, but they no longer have a right to challenge a voter. That was certainly an issue as I noted that was hot in 2004.

Very importantly to our association, it opened up Ohio's absentee voting law so voters could request an absentee ballot without having to state a specific reason.
Later on that was incorporated into another piece of legislation, House Bill 234. The bill increased the penalties for interfering with voters as they waited in line at a polling location and prohibited the harassment of folks as they waited in line. That was something that also came into play in '04.

It required polling locations to be equipped with precinct finders to assist voters in finding their correct precinct as has been noted, because jurisdiction was defined in a very narrow way.

The General Assembly thought it was important if someone showed up at the polls and was not on the voter roles the poll worker could then ask them what's your address and the voter could provide that poll worker with their address.

The poll worker would then have basically a street list or a precinct finder where they could find that person's address and refer them to the correct precinct, so that we could make sure they were voting in the proper location, so we could make sure their vote is counted. I thought that was an important step.

Finally it now required Boards of elections to conduct a public vote on the allocation of voting machines, so as to eliminate the appearance of impropriety in the placement of voting machines.
I think it's worth noting as Senator Jacobson noted, we are a bipartisan organization, it consists of two Republicans and two Democrats.

The legislature basically said when it comes down to allocating voting machines around your county that is now going to be a public meeting, take place in a public meeting with public vote by all four members of the Board of Elections, so that the public is aware of the distribution of those machines and there is the elimination of at least the appearance that one party might have tried to rig the allocation of voting machines. I thought that was important as well, something we had supported.

And while the bill was substantially different, obviously it was as introduced, more changes were certainly in store for it as it made its way through the Senate.

And a couple of things I wanted to point out about the Senate version that were pertaining directly to access, first one was the creation of an attorney in fact provision. I think you heard a little bit about that yesterday afternoon, for handicapped voters who are unable to physically make their marks or sign their names.

I think it's worth noting that I sat in a room with a lot of disability advocates and talked extensively about this particular provision, not all of the folks in the disabled community were happy with this, some of them were.

There was some discussion and some debate within that community as to the effectiveness as to this particular provision.

I think it's worth noting the General Assembly agreed and Senator Coglin in his remarks on the floor of the Senate noted this is a starting point, it's a tool not available to this group, the disabled community, prior to House Bill 3.

It's now available to them, and it's not perfect, but it's certainly a starting point and certainly better than having nothing on the books.

I don't know if you got into a discussion yesterday about the Geauga County situation, but there was a voter up there who was unable to make their mark or sign their name, they were not able to have their spouse or designate someone to sign it for them, so they were effectively barred in participating in that portion of that Democratic process.

What we attempt to do in H.B. 3 is rectify that and provide the means for them to participate. To that extent we acknowledge it's not perfect, but it's certainly a start, something that was not there prior to H.B. 3 and something that I believe we'll continue to discuss and debate in the General Assembly.

The other important thing to note and I think this was mentioned yesterday, the General Assembly codified a long standing Secretary of State directive that allows homeless persons to designate homeless shelters as an official place of residence for voting purposes, so long as that homeless person intends to return back to that shelter.

So I think that was a very positive step, it's been a directive, defacto law in the state. But the General Assembly took the affirmative step of codifying that particular provision.

Obviously it also included the new voter identification requirements that you heard much about, and I'm sure we'll continue to have discussion about.

With regard to those requirements it should be noted my association declined to take a position for or against that provision.

We found upon surveying our membership that opinions as to the necessity and wisdom of requirement vary greatly. Some said why did it take them so long to do this, why are they just now getting around to doing this. And other people said they must be out of their minds for doing this.

So clearly we had a conflict as to a unified position. Instead we decided we would offer the senators and representatives information as to how the provisions would affect the administration of elections from a more technical
And I'm happy to say that the Senate did make some changes based upon our recommendations, so we are happy about that.

All in all it's worth noting that the OAEO was very supportive of many of the changes incorporated in H.B. 3. And while the ID requirements drew much of the attention and debate, elections officials worked quietly to ensure that other less controversial, more technical issues were addressed in a satisfactory manner.

And to a large extent we believe that they were, and we'll let others groups who have more consensus on issues debate the merits of the ID requirement.

One other bill of note to this committee is House Bill 312, which is sponsored by Representative Clyde Evans. The bill would ensure that the availability of handicapped parking spaces at polling locations, our association reviewed the bill and offered some suggestions for improvement to better accomplish the goals of the sponsor.

And I've been told that it might be voted out of committee as early as next week. Turns out House Elections is not meeting next week, so probably the week after. But that's something you should be aware of.

If the committee would indulge me, I'd like to address a couple issues that came up yesterday that I could lend clarity to.

One issue that came up was the new provision in H.B. 3 that increased from $10 to $50 the amount a county can recoup for recounts. I think Professor Tokaji noted very well that particular provision had not been updated since 1950, so I guess we kind of bristle at the suggestion that this is somehow barring or prohibiting people from requesting a recount.

I would say $50 in 2006 is a good bargain compared to $10 in 1957. Those are only non-automatic recounts in Ohio. If a contest is within a half a percent there is an automatic recount that takes place that no one is charged for.

These are only recounts that fall outside of that margin, and that are requested by a candidate or a political party. So I think that's worth noting.

I also don't want this committee to be left with the impression the new direct recording electronic machines are not audited or checked in any fashion, certainly they are.

There is extensive logic and accuracy testing that is performed on the machines, and later this morning when Matt Damschroder, the Director of Franklin County Board of Elections testifies I would encourage you to ask him.

They've been using these machines for over ten years in Franklin County and he can tell you all about the exhaustive and extensive testing that takes place on the machines and auditing on the machines.

I know that yesterday the statement was made, well, you should be distrustful of those machines, because we worked on our home computers, had them crash and lost information.

I can assure you comparing these voting machines to your home computers is kind of like comparing an Indy car to a Yugo, it's just not the same.

And I would certainly encourage you as you delve into these issues to work with your local boards of elections, take a good look at these machines and find out exactly what makes them tick. I think you'll be pretty surprised.

And as Senator Jacobson and Ms. Hicks also noted, we now have a requirement for a paper trail in Ohio, so that these machines don't just record your vote electronically, they also record it on paper.

So there is a way during a recount situation for us to compare the two to make sure that the votes were tabulated correctly.

Also worth noting is the fact that in Ohio, tabulating votes electronically is not a new concept, we've been doing it for almost 40 years now in Ohio.

When you cast a punch card ballot that is merely the method of casting the ballot, they are counted later on by a tabulator that electronically scans and reads those punch cards.
And the results are given to the election officials and relayed to the public electronically.
So really the only thing that has changed here is the method by which the ballot is cast. It's now cast electronically, but it's tabulated electronically in the same manner it always has been, that's worth noting as well.
That's not to say the machines are infallible or perfect, but it's worth noting they've been exhaustively tested by secretary of states offices and found to hold up under much duress.

Another issue was the challenge to citizenship which came up yesterday. I think Mr. Doshi was particularly interested in that particular concept. Worth noting is that that particular provision was not originally conceived in House Bill 3.

It's been on the books for a while in Ohio where a poll worker can challenge based on citizenship, residents or age of the voter. That's been around for a while now and elections officials are not aware of any problems that arose because of that particular provision.

If it's something that the General Assembly thinks needs to be revisited as we explore all of these issues, we are certainly happy to entertain discussions about that. But if asked you will hear most elections officials say that's not caused problems at the polling locations in the many years it's been in place.

The issue of general readiness of elections officials to take on the challenge of implementing House Bill 3, of implementing new voting technology, of bringing our elections in to the 21st century.

I know a lot of questions were asked as to how ready will our poll workers be, how ready will our Board of Elections be, it's an excellent, excellent question and I certainly ask you to probe the members of the next panel as to readiness.

I will say this, it is challenging, yes, is it impossible, absolutely not. Many people predicted gloom and doom and despair of the 2004 election, what will happen here in Ohio when we were bombarded by huge turnouts and massive scrutiny and we survived.

It was not a perfect election by any means, but here's a secret, there are no such things as perfect elections. They are always a very human endeavor at their heart, no matter how fancy the technology humans still conduct elections and humans are infallible and so are elections.

That does not mean we shouldn't strive for perfection, but certainly we withstood the pressure of '04.
People predicted again doom and gloom in the last general election where half of the counties used new voting technology for the first time, but the system held up again and we made it through.

It was not easy, it's never easy to run a good election, and we certainly welcome the scrutiny, we welcome the questions, we need to be tested and we need to tried, we need to be challenged to perform better.

But I would just ask you as you delve into these questions to bear in mind that there will always be imperfections in elections. But the best we can do is strive for perfection and expect the best of ourselves as election officials.

And I think if you take a good look at Ohio's past we have a strong and rich tradition of running good accurate fair elections in Ohio.

And so we certainly welcome this committee's work, we hope you can build upon the many, many inquiries that have been made into Ohio's voting system, particularly since 2000, and we welcome that scrutiny, and we welcome the opportunity to work with this committee.

So thank you very much, and I'd be happy to answer any questions from the panel.
CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Thank you very much, Mr. Ockerman. We're going to be a little bit longer than we planned. We started late, we'll end up with the members and panelist to go until 11:00 for the questions. I'm sure we have some that our members would like to propose.

And who has the first question? Ms. Citrino.

MS. CITRINO: Ms. Hicks, you mentioned that 50 percent of the states were in compliance with HAVA, is Ohio in compliance at this time?

MS. HICKS: Basically in terms of that date, that was January 1st, 2006, there actually may be more states in compliance now.

But Ohio is planning to be in compliance by the May 2nd election, primarily the only things we are left to do since we have gotten all of our equipment, we are doing training now, doing implementation and delivery of equipment for those locations that have not received equipment.

So in terms of the centralized voter registration voter data base that was done in December, so we fully expect to be in compliance by May 2nd.

MS. CITRINO: What about the requirement in HAVA that disability access be throughout the state? We were told yesterday that Ohio's only about 76 percent in compliance with access for people with mobility impairments, and we haven't heard much about training for people.

An example was brought up yesterday of, for example, a non-verbal voter, what kind of provisions have been made to make these 1500 places that are not accessible, that's the estimate we had yesterday, what's the plan by May to have those be accessible?

And what's the plan for training people how to deal with someone who presents with a disability when they come to the polls?

MS. HICKS: I don't think the figure of 1500 is correct, actually. But I would say in terms of what the process is that our office uses, we have in accordance with law, we have a disability coordinator that works for the Secretary of State's office in conjunction with the Board of Elections, there is information that he provides.

And also we have the ability to go out to locations and assist with issues regarding permanent or temporary fixes for disability access.

We have, as we indicated, a grant program available to the counties for permanent or semi-permanent or temporary fixes for particular locations.

And we have utilized our field staff that works with the Secretary of State's office to go out and assist county officials in that regard if they need assistance.
For the purpose of contacting our office, we do have the ability to go out, provide information if anyone has a question regarding a particular polling place, or if an election official has a question whether or not they should move to another polling location.

One of the things that we have been advising for older locations that are permanent, are being considered by the board officials for being used in this election, we have basically told them in a lot of locations they need to go to a more modern newer facility and consider non-traditional facilities.

Sometimes we begin to use locations and we have always used them, and many elections officials are concerned about information that has been communicated to a voter about a change in a polling place.

But when you consider that an older location simply may not have, it will be too expensive to change the location in terms of what modifications are required, even with our assistance, the county may not have enough money to build a ramp or to repave a parking lot or to do those types of things.

We have suggested other locations and have assisted counties in finding other locations for the election.
I don't have an exact figure as to how many locations, but we get a regular report weekly on inquiries that are being assessed of our coordinator, who does work with the disability community and elections officials trying to find additional locations.

The 1500 figure sounds high to me, I can get back with the commission in terms of where we are now in March, relative to the number of inquiries that we have had, and where our information shows we are on that.

MS. CITRINO: What about training for people when somebody presents with an unusual or a different kind of -- needs assistance, what kind of training is in place for the poll workers to help people?

MS. HICKS: As required by law we have disability units that are available for certain types of disabilities. Certainly the vendor equipment does take into consideration certain types of disabilities.

The other person that we used as coordinator can provide assistance in the event there is a particular question about a person who is multiply handicapped and there is something that they have not been aware of at the polling location about being able to work with that person.

They have the ability to contact our office, work with our disability coordinator and find out other information associated with the use of the machine or that equipment.

MS. CITRINO: Are you talking about that day?
MS. HICKS: No. Prior to. We work with the boards everyday on these kinds of issues, that's why we have a disability coordinator.

So in terms of particular questions about the use of the new equipment, if there is a county getting new equipment realizing some counties have been using equipment since last year, if there is questions about a particular type of disability how that person can be made accessible, how the facility can work to get accessibility into the facility, the officials who are there have the ability to contact our office at any time.

Or with regard to our particular training program we have training DVDs, and CDs, information they can get from our office on use of disability equipment and about disabled voters.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Ms. Ramos.

MS. RAMOS: I have a couple of questions and I tell you what, three of them are you can answer as you choose. One is what are we doing about voter education?

Yesterday a lot of the questions were how are you reaching the people, educating how to vote, what they need to bring on voting day, if there is certain things they have to bring.

So what are the plans to do this, to outreach into the community?
And then the other one is again following up on the disability, I understood when the machines were being purchased that one of the things was you could take the machines curb side, I guess curb side voting for the disabled, what kind of procedures do you have in place for that?

I have one other.

MS. HICKS: I'm going to probably offer to share this with Aaron. But with regard to our responsibilities, the Secretary of State's Office, we are offering a disability coordinator at the state level.

However, with regard to particular issues that come up at a polling location or within the authority of the board of elections, there are staff members who actually work with individual issues on a daily basis, because that's what's done at the local level.

The Secretary of State at the state level can give guidelines and information, and we provide training materials to local officials.

The actual day to day breaks in terms of what needs to be done specifically for a voter, either prior to the election or on election day, actually happens with the officials at the polling place and boards of elections in that county.

Specifically, though, we do have information relative to which we've sent out to counties already on the voting units that can go curb side.

We actually have had -- and I reviewed information from inquiries at the board level where that asked for demonstration of these units, we've taken them out to show them how they can be used in a regular vehicle that is not disability equipped, how they can be used in a van that had been motorized, the person is maybe in a wheel chair.

Or if they are not able to get out of the vehicle, how they can be put inside. The unit weighs I think between 16 to 14 pounds, and it can be used on a lap or it can be used on a platform, so the person can't have pressure on their lap with the unit, they can put it on a platform in order to use it that way. We provided information to the counties about those kinds of units.

We have units that are certified, able to be purchased by the counties.

MS. RAMOS: Is there a requirement that each county or each precinct -- what are the requirements?

MS. HICKS: The requirements are they have disability access at the polling location. There are certain units they can choose from, depends upon the vendor that they actually select as to what type of equipment may be used at that polling location.

Some counties have precinct counts, some have DRE, some have touch screen machines.

Aaron may also want to offer some information about what county officials are doing.

MR. OCKERMAN: Chairman Battle, and Mrs. Ramos, thank you very much for that question, I'll defer a lot to the election officials who are coming in later this morning as far as specifics.

I will tell you generally, though, as far as voter education is a priority for my folks right now. Because as I indicated the technology can be fancy and flashy, but if the voters can't work it, it's not a lot of good.

Generally speaking, every county having new equipment is right now in the process of very aggressively going around their county and getting in front of every civic organization that they can, putting up demonstration units at libraries.

They made the county fair rounds last summer and fall with the new voting technology. I think the goal really is if we can get a hundred percent of our voters to vote that machine or see that machine prior to May that would be spectacular.

That won't happen. The goal of every county is to get out to as many groups, civic organizations, libraries, public places, malls, as was indicated yesterday and really try to educate those voters about that new technology and how it works.

As far as what's required by law as far as disability voting goes, I think Ms. Hicks was a hundred percent correct, the Help America Vote Act and not anything the state has required, actually requires one handicapped accessible voting unit per polling location.

Which means as was indicated yesterday that's basically an audio device that voters who cannot see or have other physical impairments will be able to vote independently on.

And that's the standard that's been held up is the privacy of that voter, and are they able to privately cast a ballot.

That's the goal that's been on everyone's mind, I know certainly the Secretary of State since we went down the road with the vendors and started exploring the technology.

MS. RAMOS: So you're saying outreach voter education is only within the realms of the boards of elections, how is it being funded? That would be a serious problem, and I want to know what's happening with funding, too.

MS. HICKS: Well, we actually have a partnership in this area. As I indicated with regard to the contracts for vendors that sell voting equipment to the State of Ohio, as part of the contractual requirements we incorporated hours of voter education and training into the contract requirement for the vendor.

So what Aaron was talking about having this display of equipment at county fairs and shopping malls, having mobile displays that can go around to churches and schools and those things, vendors have allowed demo machines to be used in that regard as part of their responsibility under the contract, to provide voter education about the machines.

There are DVDs and displays about how to use the voting machine, there are pamphlets about how to use the machines.

But one of the things we were encouraging counties to do, if at all possible, is to make sure that the equipment actually touched the voters, potential voters who could come out so they could see and feel the machine.

It's one thing to have a pamphlet, but as Aaron accurately pointed out, it's another thing to see the machines you heard about.

You can go to the library, we had it at the Ohio
State Fair, all the vendors participated in that local event.
They've been very helpful in providing equipment at those locations.

But the state actually has that as part of the contract for vendors to participate in county fairs, the counties have gotten grant money to do voter education programs for voters in their local areas.

SENATOR JACOBSON: Two quick comments.
First of all, we're required as part of the spending -- or excuse me, required as part of the decision in House Bill 3 to do voter ID, that the county boards notify before the next three federal elections, meaning November '06, and then in the Primary, and in November of '08, reminding voters of the ID choices and the requirements to provide identification.

Secondly, as to training and education, of the HAVA funds we did appropriate five million split equally between the county boards and the Secretary of State's office.

The county boards, I'm not aware of what they've done with it, whether they used it or how they've used it. And as I said the bulk of the Secretary of State's money was spent in '04.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Ms. Bledsoe.

MS. BLEDSE: Ms. Hicks, so that I can have clarity, you talked about grant funding, the grant funding, could you go over what type of funding that was, was that for public education?

And you also said only 14 counties applied for
it. Do you have a list of those 14 counties?
MS. HICKS: I certainly can provide a list. I didn't come prepared with that information today.

The grant funding I referred to with regard to the 14 counties that applied for funding was with regard to funding for handicapped accessibility or disability locations that could be permanently or semi-permanently improved for access for disabled voters.

That is a separate funding or separate grant process from HAVA funding associated with voter education and education of election officials and poll workers.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Ms. Zealey.

MS. ZEALEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My question is for Ms. Hicks.

With regard to the Secretary of State's office and constitutional responsibilities, I can think of three major areas where the local boards of education would look to your office for answers, and for leadership, training, interpretation and guidance in voter education.

If I want to see the Secretary of State's blueprint for what's going to happen this year in the May election and the November election, where can I find that information?

You mentioned for example DVDs available for disability coordinators at the local level. I'm interested in completing our record to the extent that you're very limited in the time that you have here today to answer specific questions. I'm interested in getting, if you will, a full blueprint of what is planned for this year's election. And then I have a follow-up question, if you will.

MS. HICKS: Generally, with regard to the state's plan for HAVA implementation, if you go to the Secretary of State's website, we started our first state plan in 2003, and we have updated it based upon elective changes, such as the VVPAT requirement and other things that have impacted how we implement the Help America Vote Act.

So the current state plan has information in it as to the Secretary of State's overall state implementation of HAVA. So that provides some information for a general overall background as to what the state is involved in.

If you would like specific information I can provide you particular documentation at a later date if there is something that specifically you want us to hone in on.

MS. ZEALEY: I'm not just thinking about HAVA, but House Bill 234 and House Bill 3.

With regard to training for example, do you have a training module that's planned for poll workers that you can share if that's computer based, or if it's in writing, something of that nature?
Also on voter education, both the timing of when it will go out to the voters and what it will contain in terms of concrete information.

And then my follow-up question is regarding interpretation and guidance on provisional ballots. The two questions I think that were profoundly important in 2004's election were when would the poll workers give a provisional ballot to a voter, and how would that ballot then be determined to be counted, that it is in fact a ballot stole?

And if you could address those two issues on interpretations and guidance of how that will happen in 2006, how does a poll worker determine whether to give someone a provisional ballot.

Or even more severe, tell them that's all they are entitled to get. And then how is that ballot then determined to be valid or not.

And if that is also in writing, I'd like some direction to the Secretary of State's interpretations on those issues.

MS. HICKS: I think specifically with regard to your questions on 2006 processes, one of the benefits of having experiences in 2004, we did get a lot of information and input in a number of sectors relative to provisional voting, other than what was provided in HAVA.
With regard to the new election we've had several law changes, as Senator Jacobson referenced, which now affects provisional voting that did not exist in 2004.

The primary way that the Secretary of State gives information to boards of elections and county officials on interpretation is through one source is a directive from the Secretary of State's Office.

Another source are advisory memorandums relative to new changes that have occurred in law. We have submitted information informing them of both the changes in 234 and House Bill 3, and I can provide you copies of that.

It is a guide post, provides them what the law is now, how it is to be interpreted and when it becomes effective. It also advises them that there will be future information forthcoming relative to other components of House Bill 3, which go into effect at a later date. Those two documents I can provide you.

Regarding your previous comments relative to voter education and training, as I indicated before we have a partnership with the counties with regard to voter education.

We have one component of voter education, certainly the county officials have other things that they do, which are not necessarily dictated by the Secretary of State, and voter education.
I can provide you the module of training information that we provided, which poll workers would get and election officials are required to provide this information within a certain number of days prior to the election.

So the Secretary of State has, if you will, the basic model. And then the local boards of election can build on that if they will, as long as it's consistent with the basic training.

MS. ZEALEY: Correct, correct. Because there also may be local issues that would appear on the ballot associated with that particular election, not addressed at our level.

So we provide basic information as to what the laws are relative to provisional voting or absentee voting, but how they go into other areas, which are not covered, because they are not affected in the entire state, they may be only a local issue, can be added to the training information that we provide them.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Mr. Wheeler.

MR. WHEELER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Yesterday I was very concerned and I still am today about the disabled. Between today and just go back 40, 50 years ago, people having the right to vote, accessibility, I understand there's approximately 11,000 voting places in the State of Ohio.

And I heard something a few minutes ago, the machines can come out to the curb to assist people that are disabled.

Do we know exactly how many machines we have?
Because apparently what I'm hearing, what I heard yesterday was just a few for the whole state, and I was hoping I'm wrong.
That we might be able to address that concern.

Does anyone keep up with a report with this, is there a reporting mechanism from the county or Secretary of State's office?

MS. HICKS: Specifically with regard to how many machines there are I don't have an exact number for you.
I can tell you what they are required to be with regard to disability units.

There is a disability unit required for every polling location. The number of machines that we currently have in the state is also now designated to be one machine for every 175 voters.

MR. WHEELER: Can that be certified some kind of way that's in place, so when people go nobody has to be turned around, is that certified some kind of way?

MS. HICKS: It is part of documentation that we have provided to the counties, and certainly I can provide you the information that we have submitted to the county boards of elections that they are required to follow.

MR. WHEELER: Okay.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: And with additional information that's going to be provided, I'll just repeat the record of these proceedings will remain open until April the 1st, so if additional information can be provided that would be appreciated before that time.

Other panelists have questions?

MR. DOSHI: Much of the things of the discussion has been about mechanics of voter education and it is encumbent upon the citizens to be educated and to actually participate in the process.

My concern is to the disabled community again. Yesterday I learned there are 1.4 million unregistered disabled American voters in our state.

Whose responsibility is it, is it our officials doing something about getting them to participate? If they are not participating in the process that means they are not worrying about that at all in bringing them in the process, actually what do we do about that? I hope it's not that hard of a question.

SENATOR JACOBSON: First of all, I would state that number must be a flat number, because --

MR. DOSHI: It's Ohio.

SENATOR JACOBSON: It's not possible, we only have 11 million citizens. If you take a look at the number of citizens age to be registered, and those and the number that are registered, I don't think it's possible to have -- I don't think it's possible for that to have been -- for that to have been an accurate Ohio number.

There may be a number, a large number of people in Ohio who have not registered, it's not all because of disability. I'd be happy to review the information, take a look at it.

What I would say is that the government, the legislature as well as the federal government has provided a number of different registration methodologies, including the requirement that governmental offices that they ask and require people about the registration status and encourage them to register to vote.

Obviously in America we have the right not to participate should we chose to do so as well. So no one is compelled to register. We don't offer benefits only to those who register to vote or do anything of that sort, because people have the right to choose to participate or not to.

I would -- I have heard the reports that not everyone is enforcing it, in other words that not everyone was supposed to be asking is asking.

But hopefully those are handled by reporting it to the supervisors and the elected officials that are ultimately responsible for the operation of those particular government offices, but I do believe the information is on the books and the requirements are there that we do outreach in the appropriate fashion.

MS. HICKS: An additional comment I'd like to make, which really happens not only just in federal elections, but every election and Aaron is aware of this as well.

We always work with our county officials, because they will request certain information from us relative to information that should go out to nursing homes to assist the care living facilities, to senior centers, to hospitals, et cetera.

And we have encouraged them through communications with our office, both in writing and orally, we talk to elections officials on a daily basis, it's important, and other election officials go out and they go out to community centers and places where persons are not able to come in and get information about voter registration.

This particularly comes up during the months when voter registration forms are due prior to an election. So if travel is even involved, associated with a person leaving the polling location or their place of work in order to go out to a person who's not able to get information on voter registration that is encouraged and we have our election officials do that. We have them provide information in community centers and other locations where persons may not fit the definition legally of having a disability, but they may have an inability to get to the information regarding voter registration.

The forms are brought to them so they can get registered to vote. In addition we have information that we send out through our field representatives, when we get requests like this, we do that with the Secretary of State's office to take voter registration forms out.

MR. OCKERMAN: I certainly agree with the comments made by both panelists. A lot of this falls on local folks to implement, make sure it's happening.

Just as with the case with any other relationship, there are counties where the county boards of elections have a very strong relationship with the disability community, at the local level there are other counties where it's not as strong, but certainly to the extent as an association we can encourage our folks to work at the local level that they know in the disabled community.

We always do that, we encourage them to strenthen the relationships to reach an understanding of what the needs are on both sides, and hopefully work together in a very strong fashion to accomplish the benefits and goals that you outlined.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Ms. Citrino, followed by Ms. Ramos.

MS. CITRINO: Thank you, Chairman Battle.

I have two separate comments.

First, a follow up on what Pastor Wheeler said.

We were told yesterday that while each polling location would have an accessible voting machine there, that that was different from curb side voting, in that there were only six locations statewide where curb side voting was going to be made available.

So when you provide the information if you could clarify the difference. We understand they are going to be accessible machines, but we also want to know about curb side voting.

And, two, Senator Jacobson, you mentioned that the change was made to require verification in absentee ballots, you felt that because verification was necessary for first time voters, that verification really would be acceptable to extend to all voters.
And a lot of the concern yesterday was about elderly people in maybe assisted living facilities where they are not having something with their address on it or utility bill, they don't have a drivers license.

Could you address what provisions have been made for people who are in that situation, because there was a considerable concern that those people would not be stopped from voting by absentee ballot.

SENATOR JACOBSON: Thank you. First of all, often what happens to the absentee ballot area with assisted living or nursing home facilities is the balloting does not take place by mail, it takes place by poll workers coming out prior to the election to the facility.

If in fact they hire additional people from the Board for the -- prior to the elections, and they will go to the facilities and personally in person get the absentee requests and then personally come back with the ballot and assist these individuals in voting.

And so it allows for much, you know, a much better form of identification to be made by the fact that you are there at their location and you can personally verify that they live where they say they do, which is very different.

I would also point out that most people in those facilities are probably receiving some form of government
They are either receiving Social Security, or some -- if not Medicare or something of the like, and so they will be getting communications or some documentation of that, which would allow them to be assisted.

We are certainly not required to make people send in something that discloses all of their personal information. But they will have the documentary evidence.

But the assumption is in these facilities as it works now, the owners, managers, the personnel of the facilities assist their residents with the voting process.

That's frankly why this takes place the way it does, because the owners or the managers of the facilities have set this up over time with the boards of elections to allow their residents special access to voting procedures.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Ms. Ramos.

MS. RAMOS: I want to be sure I clarified the fact of the optical scanning that was brought up yesterday. I noticed on this map there are many counties in Ohio that use optical scan.

Yesterday there was a concern about x's, you brought up circles, are those counted? I want to know are they counted if they have circles, x's or anything else. I want to be sure to clarify that, and also stray marks, something was brought up also.

MR. OCKERMAN: Chairman Battle, and Ms. Ramos very good and excellent question.

There are actually -- for the committee's information there are many states actually that are actually considering to meet the requirements of HAVA that the entire state use optical scan voting technology.

I would note that Ohio I think rightly allowed the counties to make a decision as to which type of voting equipment they wanted to use.

But to the extent that those circles or x's or, you know, people -- it's funny, I'm not sure Mr. Cunningham is going to be here unfortunately, but if you ask a county that uses optical scan equipment how creative their voters can get when it comes to marking their optical scan ballots, I think you'll be surprised by some of the marks they get.

What the General Assembly did was codify what had been the common practice through the Secretary of State's directive for a long time with regard to those particular marks.

And in House Bill 3, in that piece of legislation they actually enumerate which mark constitutes a valid vote. I think Ms. Rosenfeld can give you more information.

We had a number of conversations, she was the first one that told me that these marks actually go back several Secretary of States, and they worked I assume with their local boards to try to determine which marks were most commonly made.
The only requirement the General Assembly put was they were made in a consistent fashion. And I think the important thing there is for purposes of determining the voter's intent, sometimes we'll get a ballot that are all x's, and there is a circle.

Well, you know what, as an election official how do we determine what that means. So I think the General Assembly in giving guidance to counties said that you should examine the marks that are made, determine whether or not they meet the criteria set forth in law, and determine whether or not they were made in a consistent fashion that would allow you to screen the voter's intent, based on those marks. I hope that answers your question.

MS. RAMOS: Okay.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Mr. Humeidan, followed by Ms. Bledsoe.

MR. HUMEIDAN: I have a comment and a couple of quick questions.

The first comment is in regard to the statement that Senator Jacobson made, some of the comments about the voter registration fraud.

I personally during the last elections worked with the NAACP Voter Funds and Americans Coming Together, for them to reach out into the community of new citizens.

I think both of these organizations and other organizations should be commended for the work they did. I hope these organizations are given the opportunity to defend themselves and make comments about -- comments about the statement that was made.

Obviously there was some issues, but I hope that these organizations again are commended for the work they did.
They did a lot of great work within the immigrant community, within the community of new citizens.

My questions are with regard to the identification. We're looking at the chart that was given to us and it says that voters can use their Social Security number, for the last four digits of the Social Security number.

Are we requiring voters or registrations to have Social Security numbers on them? I know at one time that wasn't a requirement, it was a form but it was an optional thing. Are we requiring that now? Is that how it's going to be verified?

And the other question is, we've heard some issues about discrepancies in some of the ways the laws are implemented on the county level and are the Board of Elections working together to make sure that all of these issues are resolved and the same training is being conducted to all poll workers statewide, so all of the rules are implemented the same way across the state.

SENATOR JACOBSON: Before the answer is given I do need to apologize, I have to go. I'm solely responsible for picking up a child in 15 minutes, and my wife will deprive me of all of my civil rights if I fail to show up up at the appropriate time.

So thank you very much and I look forward to working with you in the future.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Thank you.

MR. OCKERMAN: Chairman Battle, and Mr. Humeidan, a couple again very good questions.

The first on Social Security numbers. That is not a required form. Under the Help America Vote Act, I believe we are now required to ask for some kind of identifying number, which can be either a driver's license number or the last four numbers of the Social Security number.

And then that will be entered into the statewide voter registration data base, which will help us determine whether if there is a Jad Humeidan who is registered in Franklin County, and one registered in Hamilton County. There will be a differentiator within that data base. But it's not required that you disclose your full Social Security number on that form.
We then under HAVA now have an arrangement through our Bureau of Motor Vehicles, through the Social Security Administration where we can have access to those identifying numbers, that we can then balance against each other in order to make sure that one voter's profile matches the profile with Social Security Administration's. So I think that's how that particular instance would work.

And did you want to clarify anything else?

MS. HICKS: That's good.

MR. OCKERMAN: Okay. With regard to statewide standards and how they are being applied locally, this is something that we always -- it's the beauty and the detriment of our system, is that despite federal intervention, despite greater standards from the state elections, fortunately we believe are still administered at the local level, and we think that's the real strength of our system here in Ohio.

That local boards of elections are able to respond to local problems, local circumstances, local instances and relate directly with their voters, so we think that's a real strength.

But at the same time as you noted it does give some flexibility, it does allow them some opportunity to deviate slightly in their administration of elections.

I would say that I think it's our belief that working with the Secretary of State on these new standards and directives that they’ll be issuing, I think you will find that as boards of elections go through, and I encourage you to ask this of the boards this afternoon, you will find that they will work very hard to adjust their policies and procedures to reflect those state standards.

And it's my belief that so long as those policies, those local policies fall under the umbrella of the directive, which falls under the umbrella of state law, which could fall under the umbrella of the federal law, I think we are protected from arguments that counties are disparately applying the law.

So there will always be a certain amount of flexibility just by the nature of our system, which again I think is our strength.

But I would say so long as the counties acting within the overall structure of those state's standards I think they are safe, and I think the voters should be secure they have a fair application of the law.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Final question, Ms.

Bledsoe.

MS. BLEDSOE: My question goes to ID requirements and the comments that were made by Senator Jacobson, when he said that we are now requiring people to send in information that would disclose their personal information. I look at your requirements of a bank statement, a pay check, to me are disclosing personal information. Had there been any thought for those persons who may send in a bank statement or a pay check what will be done to protect the privacy of those people who will mail theirs in, and how will those be disposed of and protected for those individuals?

In my opinion that is extremely personal. Thank you.

MR. OCKERMAN: I would -- I will defer a little bit maybe to Cassandra, and defer more to the boards who come in and talk specifically about how they will handle that from a legal perspective.

The requirement is only that they disclose certain information, that being a name and address for verification purposes.

So while you may send in a bank statement there is nothing that stops that person from redacting all of the other information, other than their name and address.

That's really what the General Assembly is requiring us to gather for identification purposes. So the citizen should not feel compelled to send in personal information, other than their name or address.

Now, if that information does come into the board of elections I'm not sure how exactly that will be disposed with. I will again defer to the county boards who are here later this morning who might be able to answer that question.

MS. HICKS: It's unfortunate that Senator Jacobson left, because as a legislative requirement ID information is something that was discussed I think significantly in the legislature.

It's not something that the Secretary of State's office promoted. So you have a legitimate concern that information could be communicated to an individual at a board of elections or some other office with the state that was not really intended to be provided, simply because a person is trying to comply with the law.

I think that's very, very serious. And in terms of what we can do about that, I think that our directives and information as we develop the process is to direct the boards how to handle this, will have to address mitigation and providing the correct information to citizens that they did not need to send anything else in, other than a statement that says National City Bank, it says the address of the bank, looks as though it's on the bank information, but all of the other information can be taken out simply with a magic marker or with some other information or some other device that can mark out the information that is not critical.
Because verification of name and address is what the law is. However, I think that you demonstrated one of the problems with being able to have a good purpose, but actually once you put the information together it may be overly broad in terms of its application.

So I think that's going to be something that's going to be a project for us at the state and local levels to make sure we put this information in a format where people who are bombarded with the information do not send us information that includes Social Security numbers, full numbers, those kinds of things, or include information on bank accounts, or other information not required to be sent in for voter registration.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: We appreciate the time that our panel has given to this and certainly our members have had a lot more information and clarified some things.

Ms. Hicks, would you be able to get to us the information concerning the SOS directive, or directions of the advisory memo and training module that you mentioned, could you do that for us next week so that we can have that?

MS. HICKS: Yes, absolutely, you'll have that prior to your April 1st cut off time.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Excellent, excellent.

We'll still be okay, members, time wise. We'll give ourselves 15 minutes with the indulgence of the next panel and we should be able to adjourn as scheduled at 1:00. Thank you.

(Thereupon a brief recess was taken.)

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: I'd like to thank the panel for being with us. The committee is now reconvened.

And with us for this panel we have Michael Vu, of the Cuyahoga Board of Elections; Mr. Matthew Damschroder of the Franklin County Board of Elections; and a stand in for Mr. Cunningham, who's unable to be here, who is from the Ohio Honest Elections Commission, Mr. Cliff Arnebeck.

We will begin with Mr. Vu.

MR. VU: Thank you, Mr. Chairman and Committee Members. Thank you for this opportunity to convey the work of the Cuyahoga County Board of Elections to ensure the franchise of over one million registered northeast Ohioans.

Your request to speak on our preparation for preparedness for the 2006 elections brings to the surface the need to become more aware of how recent federal and state legislation has affected local election officials' ability to conduct elections, and how we will prepare to meet voters at the polls.

My name is Michael Vu, Director of the Cuyahoga County Board of Elections.

Cuyahoga County is the 15th largest election district in the United States with a diverse demographic.
Cuyahoga County is home to 1.4 million residents. Of those 31 percent of the population is non-white.

The median age of county residents is 37.3 years.

19 percent of the population does not have a high school diploma, and only 15 percent have their bachelor's degree.

As part of my testimony I have included the data the Board of Elections has compiled to be able to address the state of our county in a more systematic fashion.

The demographic information provides some insight to the overall diversity of Cuyahoga County, as compared to Montgomery County in Maryland, and Fulton County in Georgia.

Let me just discuss Cuyahoga County's work in the past two years since the 2004 Presidential Election, which will help convey how we are able to better serve our voters.

OUR RECOMMITMENT EFFORTS

Since 2004 the Cuyahoga County Board of Elections has recommitted to its electors that we will improve the election system to be able to ensure that legal votes will be counted.

What have we done to accomplish this recommitment?

First, the Board of Elections in compliance with the Help America Vote Act of 2002, passed by Congress, will have in place electronic voting units, which will make more definitive the voter's intent and allow accessibility for persons with a disability.

Like many jurisdictions across our country, for the first time in our history, the Cuyahoga County Board of Elections is able to have redundancy in safeguarding our votes. Beyond complying with the Help America Vote Act, the introduction of new technology in the voting equipment environment allows us the capability to serve those who may not be proficient in the English language by providing the ballot in their primary language at a relatively cost effective method.

Since my arrival to the Cuyahoga County in August of 2003 from Salt Lake County, Utah, an analysis was conducted on when Cuyahoga County would fall under Section 203 of the Voting Rights Act Minority Language Provisions.

As in many jurisdictions Cuyahoga County has a vibrant and dynamic Hispanic population and we are projected to fall under the Voting Rights Act of 1965's Minority Language Provision by 2010 to 2013.

Our polling locations have been surveyed and those that require temporary equipment, installations to make them more accessible on Election Day, in order to be compliant with HAVA stipulations, have been ordered and will be in place for the May 2nd Primary Election.

In September of 2004 we implemented a new voter registration system, which has allowed the agency to enter a new era of greater accuracy in processing voter registration cards and expediting the retrieval process of each voter registration card.

We have scanned over a million voter registration cards and have attached these images to the voter's electronic record.

This is significant since we are now better able to manage each voter's record and identify and correct errors with several key strokes, instead of the traditional and manual approach of hunting for the proverbial hard copy.

This move to a new voter registration management system protected the franchise of tens of thousands of new registered voters, including thousands of voters from minority groups.

We were able to create an accurate poll book so that voters were able to cast a regular ballot, rather than a provisional ballot.

We were also able to cross reference registration information for voters who cast a provisional ballot quicker and more accurately.

The system also helped quicken the response to calls from poll workers requesting information regarding a voter's correct precinct.
As we look to the elections of 2006, the question beckons, are we prepared? Yes, we are prepared for the Primary Election and subsequent elections in 2006.

In fact, with the implementation of the touch screen voting system we have additional ways to ensure a voter's franchise.

From this point forward the touch screen voting system will eliminate over voting, which averaged .08 percent, and .96 percent in Cuyahoga County for general elections in the years 2001, 2002 and 2003.

However, this over vote range does not accurately portray what was happening at the precinct level. On the precinct level the data indicates that several dozen to several hundred precincts, depending on the election were consistently higher than the one percent over voting benchmark and have gone as high as 10.48 percent.

The touch screen system will allow for a review of the ballot before the ballot is cast. The system will also alert a voter if a race has been under voted.

This system function replaces the voter education initiatives dedicated to over voting and under voting and allows elections officials to dedicate much needed resources to other areas of concern.

With new technology will allow visually impaired voters access to touch screen voting system with minimum help and allow them to actually cast a ballot on their own. This function was not available under the punch card voting system.

A voter education and communication plan has been set where over a million dollars will be expended to ensure proper training of our 7,000 poll workers, and educating the million registered voters on the new laws and the voting system.

Over the course of 2006 we will complete over a thousand demonstrations of our new voting system. To date our countywide voter education campaign has completed over 436 demonstrations. And will complete an additional 250 events between now and May 2nd, 2006.

In the next several weeks we will launch a new website, which will make it more functional and user friendly for Cuyahoga voters and other constituencies.

Our communication plan will include paid advertising with our local newspaper, billboards and advertising on mass transit systems.

We have a suite of newly designed brochures and will be mailing an Official Voter Information Guide, similar to 2004, on how and where to go to vote to every registered voter in Cuyahoga County.

RECENT STATE LEGISLATION

Since the 2004 Presidential Election much has occurred in the enacting of legislation that will have a direct affect on our ability to administratively conduct elections. We talked about that a little earlier with the prior group.

In 2005 H.B. 234 was passed, which allowed for no fault absentee voting and placed new requirements on voters to write the last four digits of their social security number, driver's license or some form of identification on their initial application and upon returning their voted ballot.

There are some concerns on how to administratively handle that when it gets down to the Board of Elections.

The Board of Elections this past week passed our policy on how we will handle absentee applications and ballots, which are missing the new required information.

This includes sending them a letter and contacting them by phone after the 10th day by phone if necessary and if the phone is provided.

By examination the Cuyahoga County Board of Elections believes absentee voting will increase each year. In the 2004 General Election we saw over 100,000 applications submitted, which was over a 10 percent increase from the 2000 Presidential Election.

Most recently the Governor signed H.B 3, which dramatically changes the administration of election. Many of these changes were beneficial to complying with federal mandates and updating antiquated legislation. However, others became a cause for concern, including the requirement for voters to show identification before being issued a ballot.

PITFALLS & PRATFALLS

It must be noted that with all the preparations that comes with conducting an election, there are variables that are simply out of our control.

The number one issue that will play a significant role in the success of the 2006 elections will be our poll workers.

As you may know poll workers are in fact daily citizens who have been kind enough to volunteer their time to participate on Election Day. They are not full-time employees as some may believe.

With the aging population we recognize that a new population of young and energetic people must be recruited and work alongside our existing poll workers.

However, a new standard of quality is being conveyed across the United States to carry out the elections for 2006.

To assist our efforts, Cuyahoga has a very successful student poll worker program, which now has grown large enough to encompass 10 percent of our poll worker population.

However, we see additional efforts must be made on a federal and state level to increase the level of support and awareness on this issue.

THE FUTURE OF THE VOTING RIGHTS ACT

The residents of Cuyahoga County, in the State of Ohio, have had their voting franchise protected and expanded through the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

Although Ohio is not a state covered by Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act, the residents of this state have benefitted from those states that are covered by Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act.

During redistricting of congressional districts and at the precinct level there is an awareness of which redistricting plans have violated the Voting Rights Act, such as at-large districts for federal office.

The Voting Rights Act of 1965 has given minority groups the ability to challenge redistricting plans legally. The ability to legally challenge a district boundary has in itself assisted in the franchise of minority groups.

Although the specific provisions of the Voting Rights Act that are set to expire will not occur in 2006, let me convey the support I have with the renewal of these sections.
To give it a personal touch my family and I have benefitted from these provisions, as well as millions of United States citizens.

I encourage you to support these provisions to assist voters who desire to exercise their franchise in the polls, but who may need accommodations in doing so.

This concludes my testimony. I would be more than happy to answer any questions that you may have.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Thank you, Mr. Vu. Mr. Damschroder.

MR. DAMSCHRODER: Good morning, Mr. Chairman, and ladies and gentlemen of the Committee.

I am Matthew Damschroder and I have held the position of Director of the Franklin County Board of Elections since 2003.

The Franklin County Board's elections administration jurisdiction includes the State's capital and largest city, Columbus, and has the second highest number of registered voters in the state.

I am pleased to address the State of Ohio's preparedness for the 2006 federal, state and local elections from the perspective of Franklin County.

Since 1992 Franklin County voters have cast their ballots using the Danaher Electronic 1242 Electromechanical Voting Machine.

This early version of direct recording electronic or touch screen voting provided many of the voter protections required by HAVA, and not afforded by other systems, including the protection of over-voting, which is one of the most frequent errors found with punch cards and optical scan.

Because of the requirements for audio ballot capabilities and the certification to 2002 FEC voting machine systems standards, the Franklin County Board knew immediately upon HAVA's enactment that its current system would have to be replaced in time for the first federal election of 2006.

Then in early summer of 2004 the Ohio General Assembly sent Franklin County's voting system into further obsolescence when enacting the voter verifiable paper audit trail for all electronic voting systems beginning in 2006.

It was this voting system, the same one that has been used since 1992 that was used during the 2004 General Election.

Despite increases in population and voter registration, few additional machines have been purchased since 1992.

Both the requirements of HAVA and for the VVPAT rendered the purchase of additional machines economically impractical.
It was this shortage of voting machines, a shortage of at least 1,000 to 1,500 machines that resulted in long lines on November 8th, 2004, when confronted with an increase in voter turnout equivalent to almost 25 percent more individuals casting ballots at the polls on Election Day, compared to the record setting turnout for the Bush v. Gore Presidential Election of 2000.

At the risk of rehashing what is past, much of what has been said today, and even more about what has been written about the long lines of Franklin County, only some of this information has been correct and much has been incorrect.

Question: Were there long lines in Franklin County? Yes.

Question: Were the long lines the result of the county's insufficient inventory of voting machines? Yes.

Question: Does the Board bear fault in placing just more than 2800 voting machines from its 2900 machine inventory in the field on Election Day? Yes.

Question: Could the Board have done a better job forecasting precinct by precinct turnout in order to determine voting machine allocation? Yes.
Question: Were the long lines limited to minority majority precincts, or historically Democrat leaning precincts? No. In fact, there were long lines in every part of the county. My wife waited two hours to vote in our east Franklin County suburb of Bexley.

Republican friends of my then deputy director, Mike Hackett, waited to vote for three hours in the affluent west Franklin County suburb of Upper Arlington.

In fact, the last precinct to close in Franklin County was not a minority majority or democrat leaning precinct, it was in a Republican leaning northeast Columbus precinct near New Albany.

I say this not to downplay the seriousness of long lines, but to underscore the fact that voters of all demographics experienced long lines on Election Day 2004.

Question: Were voting machine allocation decisions based upon partisan intentions to disenfranchise African-Americans or Kerry voters?

No.

In fact, an employee of the Board of Elections who is also a member of the County Democrat Controlling Committee drew up the allocation plan in, the same manner as he had allocated machines for previous elections.
His plan based voting machine allocation on two factors; the first, predicting turnout based upon the objective factor of previous voter turnout data.

And the second predicting turnout based upon the subjective factor of estimating how many inactive voters would turn out in urban precincts with bloated voter roles, and how many active voters would turn out in high growth suburban precincts.

Question: Did I personally hide 1000 voting machines in my basement and garage? No.

And in fact if you saw my garage I can barely fit my Honda Accord in it.

Question: Did I abandon my post at the Board's office at any time on Election Day to meet with President Bush, Secretary Blackwell and Karl Rove on Air Force One to receive orders to implement Plan B? No.

To its credit the Franklin County Board of Elections has answered these and other questions and charted a positive course for the future, including our plan for the May 2006 transition to a new direct recording electronic voting system with voter verifiable paper audit trail, and the implementation of the identification and other requirements of H.B. 3 for November.
First we have an increased inventory of voting machines, we have increased our voting inventory from 2900 machines to 4200 machines for the Primary, and almost 4600 machines for the General Election.

Relative to voting machine education, the Franklin County Board has established an aggressive schedule of voting machine demonstrations through direct voter outreach, dedicating one full time employee to this sole task.

Our motto is that wherever two or more registered voters are gathered, there we should be.

Even though the new technology is not dramatically dissimilar from our previous system, we cannot permit unfamiliarity and inhibitions to become barriers to voting.

Second, Franklin County has partnered with its voting system vendor and will soon announce a state of the art educational web site, including an interactive section fully simulating the voting experience, including audio ballot capability for the benefit of all Ohio counties using the same ES&S electronic voting system.

And finally Franklin County has been the leader in creating an innovative multi-county collaborative approach to mass voter education featuring a $500,000 media campaign including direct mail, newspaper inserts, radio spots, and television advertisements focusing on familiarizing voters with their new electronic voting technology in Central Ohio.

Relative to poll worker education the Franklin County Board has partnered with the International Foundation for Election Systems, and the Pollworker Institute, recipients of a U.S. Election Assistance Commission grant to study pollworker education, to establish a model pollworker training program, that includes the use of written manuals, verbal instructions, interactive review tools, role playing, hands on demonstration, and take home videos, including the introduction of an innovative, pass-fail instructional website planned for November.

To prepare for the new technology the Board has spent the last two years expanding the pool from which we draw pollworkers through participation in our Association's successful lobbying effort to permit public employees to take a penalty free day from work to serve as a poll worker. And winning statutory authority to use 17 year old high school students as pollworkers. As well as establishing our Champions for Democracy Program to recruit poll workers from the ranks of the county's corporate and civic communities.

It is valuable to note that last fall more than 20 percent of our poll workers were either public employees or champions from the private sector.

And this May will feature more than 600 high school students at the polls following a wildly successful first run with high-schoolers last fall. That's almost one high school student per precinct.

To help build voter confidence in the electronically recorded election results the board plans on giving the voter verifiable paper audit trail, meaning by using it as an auditing tool during the official canvas of votes.

We are planning to randomly select the number of machines that has the highest statistical probability of uncovering a countywide error and auditing the electronic results from those machines using the voter verifiable paper audit trail.

In addition, we plan to post to the web the electronic audit log, including ballot images. This will allow any one, anywhere to independently audit Franklin County's election results on their own without having to make public records requests that are both expensive for the public and time intensive for the board.

Finally Franklin County has partnered with the Elections Sciences Institute to create a first ever line by line review of the source code for the voting system that we have selected.
It's interesting to note that even the federal government in the certification process in Ohio with Board of Voting Machine Examiners does not do a line by line review of the source code.

To assist voters with the identification requirements of House Bill 3, Franklin County is redesigning its voter identification card to include detailed information about the identification required to vote at their precinct, as well as the information necessary to request a no excuse absentee ballot.

Additionally, we will expand our multi-county media campaign into the General Election to include voter identification requirements.

As required, but not funded by House Bill 3, we will mail to every registered voter in Franklin County an informational guide on the voter identification requirements prior to the November election.

This mailing will also remind the voter of his/her voting location, provide voting machine instructions, and may also include a sample ballot.

Each of Ohio's 88 county boards of elections are ready to meet the challenges of 2006. Many counties successfully implemented HAVA compliant voting systems in 2005.

The rest of us will do so in May of this year.
And we will successfully implement the identification and other requirements of House Bill 3.

Ohio voters can be proud that their county boards of elections are staffed with elections professionals who are dedicated and do their job because they care about their neighbor's right to vote.

We are not lazy bureaucrats or country bumpkins. We are experienced at getting cash blood out of budgetary turnips and expert builders with worn out tools.

While additional funding would be beneficial for additional voter education, pollworker training, and the unanticipated increased operating expenses of new voting systems, the imminent lawsuits, legislative tinkering and partisan manipulations of the system for political purposes clearly will not be beneficial.

Whether for good or for ill, HAVA and House Bill 3 are law. Making late changes, whether through legislation, administration directive, or judicial decree, will not assist us in accomplishing our statutory obligations, much less build voter confidence.

Imagine trying to implement a pre-election procedural directive after half of your poll workers have been successfully trained, much less enforce a judicial decision issued after the polls have opened on Election Day.
We call respectfully call upon the political stakeholders, whether politicians, political parties or advocates to join us in our task to educate voters on the new protections and requirements of HAVA and House Bill 3, instead of using these same protections and requirements as weapons of political gain.

Honorable Committee Members, Franklin County and our fellow Ohio elections officials are prepared for Election 2006.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Thank you, Mr. Damschroder. Mr. Arnebeck.

MR. ARNEBECK: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and members of the Commission. I appreciate very much the opportunity to give testimony.

My name is Cliff Arnebeck, I am chairman of a group called Ohio Honest Elections Campaign. This campaign was created by a group called the Alliance for Democracy, after the 2004 election, for the purpose of addressing issues of the integrity of that election, particularly with respect to the presidential contest. We funded and staffed the lawsuit before the Ohio Supreme Court contesting the outcome of that election.

In addition, the Alliance for Democracy brought an action or a motion to intervene in a case that the Ohio Democratic Party had filed on election day here in Franklin County asking that all possible means be taken to enable people to vote because of the long lines.

The suit also applied to Knox County, which is where Kenyon College is located, and the lines were even longer, 6, 8, 10 hours long.

The judge said this is unacceptable and ordered both counties to do whatever could be done, including making paper ballots available.

Now, Director Damschroder made a bunch of statements about Franklin County.

One of the things Franklin County had asked the Secretary of State for permission to do in view of their knowing that there weren't enough machines before the election, was to have a paper ballot alternative. The Secretary of State said, no.

On the shortage of machines, was there a different impact of the shortage of machines in the inner city, high performance Democratic precincts, than in other precincts,
yes.

Indeed there were fewer machines in prior elections in those precincts, which that was not the case in Republican oriented precincts.

The fact that the precincts that had the worst, disproportionately worst situation, longer lines were predominantly African-American.

Given our history of discrimination in this country leads one to say, let's investigate why this happened, and let's make sure it was not intentional.

Because certainly as Mr. Damschroder said these things can happen. Simply as an example in the 2000 election Al Gore had withdrawn from Ohio, he quit.

And that is the -- that is the race, that is the competitive race that normally will bring out people to vote.

In the 2004 election Kerry was in it to the end, highly competitive race, people were highly motivated to vote.

It's quite possible that the reason that the Afro American voters suffered disproportionately long lines is not that many turned out in the 2000 election, and that was the basis for predicting turnout in the 2004 election and that's possible.

But we did not have bipartisan hearings either in a legislative body or in a court where these questions were asked, and these matters were decided on an objective basis.

I got involved in the 2000 election on behalf of the Alliance for Democracy, challenging an illegal $7 million attack using corporate money on a Supreme Court justice.

It was illegal, it was extraordinary, it was intended to affect the outcome of the election. This has been litigated over a period of five years, it's now all done.

It's been addressed by the Federal court, the State court and the Ohio Elections Commission, and they found that it was illegal, illegal corporate money. It was a defamatory -- knowingly defamatory attack on this Democratic justice.

The reason I bring this up is first of all, I was not involved in that as a partisan. The Democratic party did not litigate. I was involved in litigating on behalf of a non-partisan 501 (C)(3) organization.

The point is that partisan interests will use -- will cross the line. And it was this theory of magic words, a magic words interpretation of the Constitution, Buckley versus Veleo that was being used to say we can do this.

I think it was a frivolous argument, but it was done. It was done with the intent of affecting the election.

My point for you would be that there is nothing more important to the preservation of civil rights as we develop them in this country, than preserving the honesty and integrity of our court system, and these kinds of attacks by a segment of the business community on the independence of the courts, is a very fundamental attack on the civil rights of all Americans.

In regard to the 2004 election, I wasn't involved in the Kerry campaign. I was involved in litigating once again on behalf of the Alliance for Democracy, against the continuing use of illegal corporate money in the Ohio Supreme Court race.

The Chamber of Commerce through its group called Citizens for a Strong Ohio spent $3 million in support of the Republican candidates for the court, 3 of the 4 Republican candidates for the court.

After the election I was advised by the founder of the Alliance for Democracy, Ronny Dugger, who wrote the article, landmark article in 1988, New Yorker Magazine, in which he said with the advent of electronic voting machines we have a new vulnerability to fraudulent manipulation of voting.

And this is sort of a landmark introduction of this into the main stream media.

In his article he points out that there is a history of this. There is a history of folks being so passionate about getting their guy elected that fraudulent means have been used.

All right. We talked to -- right after the election he said he thought that this election had been manipulated, and we proceeded on a plan, how should we investigate this.

At the same time a guy named Bob Fitrakis, who was a Professor of Political Science at Columbus State University, and former international inspector, monitor of elections, began -- initiated some hearings. So we had hearings of folks, two hearings in Columbus, hearing in Cleveland, a hearing in Cincinnati, where we took testimony under oath with a court reporter. And I would like to submit that to you for your consideration.

People told their stories, and there are some rather dramatic stories that were told.

A woman in Cleveland stood up and told about the fact how she had never voted before, she had -- her family had come from the south, and I believe it was her grandfather had been lynched because he had voted.

And because of that historical thing in her background she had never voted, she always carried that fear. And she said she brought with her to this hearing a woman who had persuaded her that this election is so important you need to vote.

And then she described her voting experience, which had problems.

There were people in Cincinnati who talked about all kinds of things, corporations releasing employees to go to a campaign event that got televised.

People being paid to vote multiple times.

A woman from Warren County where there was a supposed homeland security alert that closed down or removed the press from monitoring, she said in 2000 there were no signs for Al Gore for president.

If you were a Democrat, you were laying low because it was just not a friendly climate. She said in 2004
there were lots of Kerry signs.

She said it was totally unbelievable to her, based upon just seeing what was going on that Kerry got no more votes than Gore in 2004, go not more votes than Gore got in 2000 in Warren County, because of the demographic changes that were occurring there.

In Franklin County the big problem was the long lines, and it was different between white and black areas. So there were definite problems.

The lawsuit that we filed challenging the outcome of the election was not based upon voter suppression, it was based upon anomalies in the results that were suggestive of the movement of votes, probably at the county level, the tabulator level, in a number of counties that were sufficient to have changed the outcome of the election.

The suit also relied upon the fact that besides these anomalies there were exit polls that showed that Kerry won in Ohio substantially, and he won the popular vote nationally.

These polls were not done by amateurs, these polls were done by Warren Matovský, who is the originator of exit polling. He's the person that conducts exit polling in foreign countries where people because of the imperfections of governmental process are worried about fraudulent manipulation of elections, and the exit poll is one of the important tools, to say this was an honest election.

At the same time these questions arose -- oh, in regard to our exit polls. Perhaps on the assumption that we have a system that has a high level of integrity and sophistication, the practice in our exit polls is to adjust the polls to reflect the actual reported results in the course of the evening.

So the exit polls that show that Kerry won Ohio and won nationally the popular vote, were the polls that were in place and broadcast up to about 12:30 at night on Election Day.

In the morning if you tuned in and looked at the exit polls you would see the adjusted exit polls. Based upon the exit poll data, which is just as strong and compelling and well founded as the exit polls that our government relied upon to challenge the vote in the Ukraine for president, that is good data. And that was a key part of our case.

Now, what is the problem with the process that we have, if there is an issue about the integrity of an election, as important as president for the United States, what is the process we go throw to address that.
John Conyers urged the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, a Republican, Sensenbrenner to hold hearings to permit the minority and majority to subpoena witnesses and to gather evidence, so that we could hear from Matt Damschroder, we could hear from Mr. Vu, we could hear from folks and get to the facts and feel confident that the apparent problems had a good explanation and we could be satisfied we are getting the right results.

The majority would not cooperate. John Conyers conducted two hearings, one in Washington at which I was privileged to testify, and another in City Council chambers here in Columbus.

Took testimony and prepared what's been described as one of the most important congressional reports in history, a hundred and some pages describing what went wrong in Ohio.

In addition to excellent work done by the staff of that minority in the House Judiciary Committee, that report cites to the Moss versus Bush lawsuit for many of its facts.

It also cites to articles from the free press which, was publishing internationally on the internet all of the data we were gathering in these hearings and from other means, Statistical analysis, anomalies, exit polls, et cetera.

The most frightening thing to me as a lawyer and a citizen is that we had a certification of such an important office without the chairman of the Republican Party or the Secretary of State of Ohio, or Karl Rove coming before the committee and answering questions, you know, was there a strategy to suppress the votes? Was there some kind of a plan to -- did you have a contract with somebody to -- you used the vulnerability of our electronic voting system to change the vote and affect the outcome.

And you can say, well, what's the point of that, if they did it they lied. The point is that we have a process of cross examination. We have a process of discovery. And we have criminal laws that say when you take an oath before a committee or a court of law and commit perjury you're compounding whatever offense you've already committed.

We didn't have any of that as part of giving this assurance of integrity to our elections.

Senator Jacobson talked about -- I forget the word he used, but a disgrace in reference to both the litigation in the 2000 election and the litigation in the 2004 election.

With respect to the 2000 election, there is no question that there was an intentional plan to disenfranchise African American voters in Florida, knowing that they were eligible to vote.

There was a contract, there was a process. I believe the Civil Rights Commission investigated this, but there was no prosecution. There was no accountability.

Paul Crudman, writing an article about elections and what happened in Ohio, August 19th, 2005, made the statement that the significance of Florida was that the political operatives learned that there was no penalty for cheating.

As a consequence in the 2002 election there was more cheating in Georgia. And in 2004 there was even more cheating in Ohio.

He described Ken Blackwell as a person who made Katherine Harris look like a wonderful Secretary of State.

So we have a serious problem with our elections. We have a concerted attack upon the civil rights of all Americans that has not been properly investigated. It's not been prosecuted where there are clear violations.

I'd be happy to answer any questions.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Members, questions for the panel? Mr. Doshi.

MR. DOSHI: Just to pick up on the last statement, what happens if -- if there is a violation cited in this election? What are the remedies to correct any chance of correcting the election?

MR. ARNEBECK: Are you talking about for 2006?

MR. DOSHI: Yes.
MR. ARNEBECK: First of all, House Bill 3, it was excellent testimony, the bill went from 22 pages to 300 pages, those added pages did not come from gentleman like Mr. Vu or Mr. Damschroder. It didn't come from League of Women Voters, Ohio Citizen's Action, Common Cause, the various grass roots organizations that exist to remedy these problems we had in 2000, 2004.

They came from consultants, I assume from Washington for the Republican Party, who said this is what we need to permit suppressing votes and rigging votes to the extent that it's necessary in the next election.

What the bill does among other things is eliminate the right of Ohio citizens to contest federal elections.

Here we have a history of impropriety, a history of apparent fraud in the election process, and certainly a history of whether intentional or not, significantly different effects on minority voters than majority voters.

And you're taking away one judicial mechanism for contesting that, how can that make any sense.

One of the important points that Mr. -- Senator McCain has made is that if you're talking about reform, it better be bipartisan, otherwise be suspect. This transition from 22 pages, not totally uncontroversial.
For example, HAVA says if a person registered to vote by mail, and did not provide verification of identity, then when they come to vote they must provide that identification of identity.

A very limited requirement. The expansion of that requirement to require ID from everybody is a way to slow down the lines.

And in the hands of partisan people with partisan intent, it could be used as an instrument to disproportionately slow down and force people into provisional voting, to discourage their voting as it may serve a partisan interest.

This bill, House Bill 3, was called publicly a voter suppression bill by the League of Women Voters. League of Women Voters is not a radical organization, it's not a partisan organization. It was passed on a totally partisan basis, not a single Democratic voted for it, three Republican votes against it.

It's not a reform bill, it's a destructive bill.

Will people like Mr. Vu and Mr. Damschroder be able to work with it and make it manageable, hopefully, with perhaps the assistance of the courts.

But this civil rights advisory group should be making a record of the fact that this is partisan, and it's not just Ohio, it's coming right out of Washington.
It's based upon the same filaceous allegations that were made by Mr. Jacobson here against the NAACP National Voter Fund, Americans Coming Together, AFL-CIO and ACORN.

These people did a wonderful job of having -- getting people to register to vote for the 2004 election.

These are not fraudulent organizations.

NAACP was founded for the purpose of reducing the number of lynchings in the south. It has the most imminent distinguished and conservative record of any organization in this country, as far as I'm concerned.

And I was privileged to represent them in defending against a racketeering suit filed by Republicans at the instance of the Lucas County Republican Party on direction from political operatives in Washington to file that for partisan purposes. It's totally hog wash.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Reverend Wheeler.

MR. WHEELER: You know I deal with civil rights each and every day of my life being Chairman of the Ohio Civil Rights Commission, and you have quite an argument Mr. Arnebeck.

But my question is, well, first of all both of the county administrators, I really appreciate your feedback today from my home county of Cuyahoga, very diversified county, also Franklin.
And I noticed that you in your presentation, you showed New Albany had long lines and Upper Arlington and Berwick. You were trying to show that it was uniform in effect, all of the problems were all over the county.

And then I'm hearing from what Mr. Arnebeck is stating today that it was -- stuff happened that depressed the public.

And I'm trying to figure out what's the nexus data?

I have to say I'm a preacher in this county, and that one may have got by me, I'm trying to understand. And also received one of the highest awards from the NAACP, Ben Hooks, my good friend, but I'm trying to understand if there is some wrong, we want to right it. So help me out with that please.

MR. DAMSCHRODER: An excellent question Reverend Wheeler. As I mentioned in my testimony, I don't reference those other parts of Franklin County in which there were long lines to in any way downplay the negative effect of long lines on any registered voter.

But rather to try to dispel the urban myth that the only people in Franklin County that had to wait in long lines at any time on Election Day were African-Americans or Democrats.

There were three issues that our ward has identified -- board has identified as issues that caused long lines, the general shortage of voting machines, period.

We went into the election knowing that, and we did our best, as Mr. Arnebeck mentioned, by asking the Secretary of State if there would be an opportunity to put a secondary voting system into place, and the Secretary of State said no.

The other issue was turnout. I mean we had literally 25 percent more people on Election Day between 6:30 in the morning and when the polls closed at night, 25 percent more people at the polls than in 2000. And those 25 percent of the people were all over the county.

But as a result of the Franklin County show for the first time in almost ages, a Democratic candidate for president carried the county by 50,000 votes, the turn out was primary in Democratic precincts.

Also the issue that led to the long lines and that I believe was the cause of what individuals view as the Board's taking, as Mr. Arnebeck mentioned, taking machines out of historically Democrat or African American precincts was that as you know, Reverend Wheeler, Franklin County is a growing county, and we had 33 -- if I remember the number correctly, 33 more precincts in 2004 than in 2000, but the same number of voting machines.

So those voting machines had to come from somewhere. And so we did our best to -- based upon evaluating previous turnout, to say this, we have to put machines in Canal Winchester or the far east, Reynoldsburg, out towards Brice Road, we had to put machines out there somewhere, they have to come from somewhere, and there is not -- most of those machines came from central city Columbus.

But also I think it's important to note it was not limited to central city Columbus. The City of Westerville had a net reduction of 30 voting machines total. We tried to be as equitable as possible using the objective standard of historic turnout as our guide.

In some cases we got it right, some cases we got it wrong. And the impact of too few voting machines, unprecedented turn out caused people to have to wait all over Franklin County.

MR. VU: If I can respond, Cuyahoga had long times, too. They may not have been as systemic as in Franklin County.

But let me just give you a description of the number of voting we had. We had over 10,000 voting units on election day.

Now, we have 1,400 precincts, but we have over a million registered voters during that 2004 election, and we still had long lines.
And I went out to some of these locations and I knew things were going all right within the building election day, but I wanted to know whether Rome was burning out there. So I went out to some of these facilities, and one of the things I noted most was although there were long lines, there was just one long line.

Now, there are a number of precincts in a polling location, and one of the things I recognized was voter behavior. Voter behavior when they get to a polling location is to stand in a line.

So when they see a person stand they don't go to the other voting precinct tables that may be empty. They go to the one they believe they should go, because others are congregating around that table, knowing they may potentially be in a different line, or different table. That's one of the things that I recognized.

The question is how are we prepared since 2004, and I think that's what this committee wants to hear is, No. 1, for us in Cuyahoga County with the new technology, we now have the ability to expand all of the different various electronic voting machines to encompass that everyone can use the same machine, as opposed to dedicated machines, because we were running on a punch card system, for a specific precinct, because of Ohio's law and statutory rules on rotational ballots.
That is, Reverend, you cannot vote on the same voting unit as potentially Chairman Battle, because of the rotation factor, you belong to different precincts. That's one significant issue in our preparations in moving forward with HAVA in using electronic voting devices.

The other issue in Cuyahoga County we face, we believe we need more devices. We are going to 10,000 punch card units to only 5,407, a little over 50 percent of what we currently had. We believe we need another 900 voting machines, we're working with county commissioners to provide that.

I think it's going to go a long ways in the way of how we vote as a community. I think we have to simplify it. And of course House Bill 3, there are some good prohibitions in there, but there are also some others, and identification is one of those that I consider as an alarming red flag for us in future elections.

In 2000 the issue was the swinging chad, the intent of the voter essentially. And then 2004 is long lines. This issue of what the next issue is going to be for 2008 or 2006 is not known yet, it remains to be seen, but something will be coming down the pipe.

It's for local elections officials, as well as state officials to try to anticipate what those items may be. No one anticipated that there may be long lines.
We actually anticipated if we were able to purchase 600 more voting devices prior to the election, Franklin County was not in that, having that capability, since they had specific types of voting devices and the Secretary of State apparently did not have that contingency plan in place, which all elections officials know Plan B needs to be in place.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Ms. Ramos.

MS. RAMOS: Some of the implication was that it was purposely done to disenfranchise certain voters, but on the boards of elections I do believe -- I believe every county has two Democrats, two Republicans.

So in Franklin County did the allocation of these machines not have to go through the Board, and the workers were doing it, although most of the workers are also split in the same ratio?

And so the implication would be that the Board would be purposely doing this. And I find that, you know, kind of hard to think that the board purposely approves not allocating machines properly.

MR. DAMSCHRODER: Excellent question. And in Franklin County, the chairman of our Board of Elections is also the Chairman of the local county Democratic Party.

And all of our full-time employees are equal numbers of Republicans and Democrats.
In the prior testimony, House Bill 3, the actual decision of voting machine allocation was not an issue that was discussed or decided by the Board members, in terms of discussion actually taking vote, it was decided at the staff level.

And as I mentioned in my testimony it was actually a member of the County Democrat Central Committee that was in charge of making that allocation.

And again as I mentioned with my answer to Reverend Wheeler, we just didn't have enough machines and allocated them as best as we knew how.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Ms. Presley.

MS. PRESLEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My question is for Mr. Vu.

There was an article in the Cleveland Plain Dealer, indicating that we have a few employees that still are working for the County Board of Elections who have been indicted.

And the questioned about why they are still working, it was indicated that there was a discrepancy in the decisions that they made.

But I guess I'm still questioning why they are still working. And what is your take on how we are going to resolve some of these issues.
Because those people have felony charges and not only misdemeanors, but felony charges.

MR. VU: I understand. It can only go so far, because of the individuals that are now having these legal concerns addressed personally to them.

Why are they working at the Board of Elections, continues to work at the Board of Elections, the process that we see and the Board members as well as myself have stated for the record, for the public to know we have confidence in our staff. That we have -- that during the time frame of the '04 presidential recount that's what the issue is, is that we had all met and addressed the same issue.

Now -- and worked through the various procedures, we had talked about these procedures, and talked with the staff regarding those procedures.

And everyone in the audience that were witness -- who were witnesses and challengers were present. There is nothing at this time that has indicated that these individuals have not only followed the processes and procedures that have been outlined for the past 23 years, these again, the same procedures that we had conducted for the presidential recount, were the same processes and procedures that we had conducted for the past 23 years, including the week prior to that recount, because we had recounts other than the presidential recount that year.

There is nothing that we have seen that I've heard, that I've touched, that I felt that indicates that these individuals had done anything wrong than following the procedures that have been in place.

And that's pretty much the reason why we had stated for the public we have a hundred percent confidence in the way they handled themselves during the recount.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Yes, Ms. Zealey.

MS. ZEALEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm a lawyer and I love to go to court, especially to trial. But I like even more to prevent problems.

And while we have this vast pool of knowledge here, it seems to me that it's a perfect opportunity for any of you to make recommendations on how to address the long lines that we know will be present in 2006, because of the new technology and the new ID requirements, and any other problems that are preventing them, what are your recommendations?

MR. DAMSCHRODER: From Franklin County's perspective I think that there are a number of proactive things the Board of Elections can do.

For us beginning with a larger inventory of voting machines is first. Franklin County is adding more than $2 million of local funds to the state and federal funds in order to procure more machines than the Secretary of State had initially designated for us.

Same thing goes for what Michael is trying to do in Cuyahoga with his commissioners.

For us with our voter education campaign, television campaign, try to give voters information and tools they need before election day, so that they remember to bring that piece of ID with them, train poll workers, et cetera.

And funding is a major component of that. That was mentioned in the previous panel by Aaron Ockerman and Ms.
Hicks of the Secretary of State's Office, of one of the strengths in Ohio's system is that it's local based.

One of the weaknesses of that system is that it's locally funded. And the same dollars we compete for to run elections are the same dollars we compete for to pave roads and fund social services and all the competing interests at the local level.

So from the funding standpoint I think that's a critical issue, as well to address a couple of the issues that Michael mentioned.

One of the things Franklin County is doing with the relatively long lines is we are trying to reduce the number of multiple precincts, the cuing issue Michael raised, when someone shows up at a church with two precincts they stand in line.

When in reality if there were better cuing options that line would be cut in half immediately by going to two different tables.

So dividing those locations up by more facilities we are able to solve that cuing issue.

There is a number of things that we are doing. And I think similar to what I said at the end of my testimony, I think the biggest thing that we can do, whether it's this committee, boards of elections or organizations politicking is that the law is what it is, and focus all of our energies on educating the voters and giving them the tools, instead of trying to tinker with the rules at the last minute.

The thing that will undermine voter confidence and cause long lines on election day that will be a federal court that pipes out a decision Monday afternoon saying stop everything you told your poll workers to do over the last five weeks and doing something different.

That $500,000 you spent on TV telling the voters to bring that to the polls, they don't need that, they need something else, that's what undermines voter confidence and causes problems on election day.

If there's going to be litigation let it be in June or July, not October.
So my hope would be that we all rally to the cause of giving the voters the education and tools that they need.

MR. VU: I've always considered election reform as happening on a number of levels. Of course there is the federal, state and local level.

Local level in being able to control that aspect of it. We have tried everything that we can in resources and time to better ourselves in the way we conduct elections internally at the Board of Elections.

That's one of the reasons we invested $350,000 to scan in every registration card we had in the building, and tie it with the electronic record.

That way if you fill out a registration card and instead we enter it in incorrectly, we have the ability to bring up the registration card and correct it on our end.

The other items I think we have to recognize as local elections officials is that we are not the professional in everything. Yes, we are professionals in conducting election administration. However, we need to recognize we are not the experts in the IT field or marketing field.

We need to utilize and be aware that we need to utilize the resources we have in our communities. Cuyahoga County is working with Case Western University professors of engineering, as well as Cleveland State University engineering, as well as working with our agencies within Cuyahoga County to better ourselves and our understanding of what this new environment that we are going into, whether it be electronic voting or whether it be House Bill 3 or other aspects of marketing even, and advertising.

That's one of the reasons why we projected out years in advance. In fact, 2003 it would probably take at least a million dollars to educate the public into transition into implementing Help America Vote Act, namely the new electronic voting devices.

As well as now absentee application and identification that they need to bring per House Bill 234, as well as those requirements in House Bill 3 for voters at the polling location.

We are doing everything that we can possibly, but I think the biggest thing is more awareness we can do as local elections officials to understand the nature of things that we may not be professionals in.

MR. ARNEBECK: I'd like to suggest that whatever the commission can do, that is the Civil Rights Commission, to send a signal that irregularities will be carefully investigated and prosecuted is a very important part of correcting the problem, and restoring trust of the American public in our voting system.

Do you have subpoena power?

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Not this committee. But the Commission.

MR. ARNEBECK: Civil Rights Commission does. I would suggest that you recommend in view of the problems and give them the Conyers report that are evident in Ohio, the United States Civil Rights Commission convened an investigation and issued subpoenas and holds hearings to fully explore the problems.

I have confidence that there are people -- the people will come up with very good explanations for the problem. And people will be satisfied that it was not intentional. And remedies will develop out of that investigation no matter what the law is to better enable those who administer the law to avoid these problems in the future.

I don't know how we deal with partisan government. People who have taken an oath of office to uphold the Constitution and to serve the public, and who pervert that power of office, that incredible power of office, to try to manipulate the laws in government to the disadvantage of the general public.

That's what happened in Ohio. And it's possible, because we have one party control. And so you don't have bipartisanship.

This House Bill 3 is totally partisan. So I can't persuade the Republican legislature or the Republican governor to pass a law that eliminates these ID requirements, which are not valid, they are not in the public interest.

We have a history, and we've gotten along many, many years with the signature, it works. And there is no better system for identifying the person coming to vote, than the person who's registered.

I personally looked at voting books, and I've seen whether it's clear someone voted fraudulently, because the signature bears no relationship to the signature in the book.

So if someone says we want to assure the identification of the voter, we want to avoid fraud, enforce the procedure we had in place, it's very easy for a fraud to come up with phony ID, so this bill does not address voter fraud. It is a voter suppression bill.

The only remedy that I'm aware of is to go to court and point out to the court that there is a history here, there is a partisanship here, and there was no testimony, there was no evidence to support this requirement, and there is no requirement in HAVA.

This is a partisan thing, a way to create long lines or be able to suppress, discourage people from voting.
Same thing with the Secretary of State's interpretation of provisional voting, which has now been carved into statute in House Bill 3.

HAVA does not say your vote will count only if it's cast in the right precinct. It says it should be counted if it's cast properly within the jurisdiction. The jurisdiction is the County Board of Elections in Ohio. So that ought to be changed.

We have been using the election laws in Ohio through partisan officials. Secretary of State is a Republican, he was the co-chair of the Bush campaign, he's been using that office to tilt the process in a partisan way.

The court should address that, politically we should address that. But the commission would do a great service if it would hold hearings, issue subpoenas, make people testify under oath.

So that when people, if they contemplate lying, they'll face potential ultimately the sanction of perjury prosecution.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Mr. Doshi. And the final question will be Mr. Humeidan.

MR. DOSHI: I'm being a little analytical, I can't help being an old scientist here.

The long lines that are a matter of reading the instructions also, how long it's going to take somebody to read and interpret and then vote. Are there statistics how long it takes for an individual on average to cast a vote based on that? But I believe the number of machines, if we had long lines if I take ten minutes, he takes 15 minutes, you're going to have long lines, no matter how many machines you have. The more the better. We need some statistics that help us understand the mechanics of it.

MR. DAMSCHRODER: Mr. Doshi, you're exactly correct. And with the new electronic voting systems for the first time ever we'll actually have meaningful statistics as part of that system.

There is a legal time audit log that takes a time stamp of all the transactions during the day. So we'll be able to know, let's say an election where there's low turn out of the hundred people that voted, these many people voted in the morning and what time these people voted in the afternoon, etc., and how long the average time was for them to vote.

The time that it takes to vote is a significant factor in determining the long lines, and also in making machine allocation decisions.

I did not mention in my testimony, but you may recall in 2004 the City of Columbus, in addition to the federal races, 12 judicial seats, your state representatives and everything else, the City of Columbus had ten very lengthy construction bond issues on the ballot, in addition to Issue 1, school levies and local options, things like that.

Part of what also caused those long lines is people walked in and knew who they were voting for president, but got bogged down when they started reading about sewage and millage and that kind of stuff with the bond issues.

So in the future we'll be actually able to use real data, like the time it takes to vote and determining machine allocation.

The General Assembly however has taken away part of our discretion in machine allocation as part of House Bill 3, and said two different things.

One is that the minimum number of machines in a precinct has to be 1 to 175. One machine for everyone 175 actual voters of the most recent gubernatorial election. That has to be your minimum.

And then the minimum countywide has to be 1 to 175 of your current registration. So there will be less discretion, even though we have better statistics. But there will be a base line that will be established from previous turn out.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Mr. Humeidan.
MR. HUMEIDAN: I actually have a few questions, so I'll ask them all and give you a chance to respond to them.

As far as the long lines, though, I'll let you know I live in a predominantly Republican precinct, and there was long lines. I voted and there was about a three hour line.

But I think the net effect on the voters was somewhat disproportional, because not everybody has the privilege to take 3 or 5 hours out of their day or take the whole day off so they can wait in line to vote.

I think even though there was long lines everywhere throughout Franklin County and other counties, I think the net effect on the voters was disproportional.

So anticipating long lines because of the new technology, again is there a Plan B for election day? That's my first question.

And then my second question is what is Franklin County and Cuyahoga County doing for trying to get the voters hands-on the voting machines before election day.

I know that there is a media campaign, there is different programs, but I think it's different when somebody gets to touch the machine, gets to use the machine and see it, than to see it on TV or on a website.

The third question is what is your progress on curb side voting and accommodating disabled voters in both of your counties?

MR. DAMSCHRODER: Great questions. In terms of Plan B for this election year there is two issues, our association actively works with the General Assembly to eliminate the 11 restrictive rules on absentee voting.

We believe that there will be a significant increase in individuals choosing to vote by mail during the 35 days before the election, instead of waiting until election day. That will help individuals who don't have the flexibility to take time off work or have some other reasons.

So we believe that the no fault and no excuse absentee voting will help as part of reducing the long lines.

In addition as one of the things that we will have, because Franklin County will be going away from the punch cards for absentee and provisional voting to optical scan for absentee voting, we will for the first time have the ability to print ballots on demand at our office and take them to precincts that are experiencing -- if they are experiencing long lines or some kind of machine failure.

That was part of what Judge Marbley wanted us to do in 2004 at 7:35 in the evening, but was largely impractical because of the kind of paper voting system we had at the time.

Now, in Franklin County Plan B will be if there is long lines, machine failures, we'll be able to take ballots in our office out to those precincts, we'll have voters to vote more quickly.

In terms of the voting machine demonstrations we have what we view as a pretty aggressive voting machine demonstration campaign, where we have one full-time person that's all he's doing every day, every night, taking machines out into the community.

And we have other folks that do it with him when there is conflicts, those are posted to our website, promoted by the groups that were attending.

We decided instead of setting up shop in a high traffic area, although that's one solution, we wanted to work through existing groups to use their PR mechanisms to promote our presence.

In addition to that we also will advertise that in the local newspapers, not the Columbus Dispatch, but local suburban community newspapers that are going to be at the Whetstone Library demonstrating the machines.

And then in terms of curb side voting with Franklin County, with the advent of voter verified paper audit trail and our vendors solution to that, we will not be able to provide the electronic voting for curb side voting.

I think from talking to Michael, I don't want to steal too much of his thunder, I think they'll use -- in addition to putting electronic voting in the precincts they'll use optical scan for curb side voting.

Because Franklin County, which is different from Cuyahoga County, the number of split precincts, of our decision of going electronic was putting paper in the precincts increases the likelihood the voter will vote the wrong ballot, and be disenfranchised.

So we are working with the disability community to try to really -- for those who need curb side voting, to really encourage them to come to the Board of Elections during the 35 days prior to the election, or they can receive additional assistance or use the no fault ballot at home.

All of our machines in the precinct are fully ADA accessible with the ADA value component.

MR. VU: As far as Plan B goes, No. 1, we'll have what's known as an election day technician inside our polling locations. This will be beyond the two Democrats, two Republicans for each precinct for poll workers. That election day technician is slowly to review and direct and greet voters as they come inside the polling location, get them to the right precinct.

Their responsibility is to also deal with the voting machines themselves and relate any problems in that case, if there are potentially any supply issues they have.

The Board of Elections in Cuyahoga County breaks down the county into six zone stations. Each zone station is essentially a place where all supplies are kept.

We will also have 63 individuals roving around the county to expedite the process of getting materials to them.

As Director Damschroder has stated we will be using optical scan, not only as a method for curb side voting, but as a method for backup measures if things get long that we can actually turn towards those optical scan ballots.

We also have the ballot on demand should we run out of the optical scan, as well as utilizing the services of a printer close to Cuyahoga County.

I know that counties are going to one specific vendor in Dayton, whereas ours is located right next to Cuyahoga County.

As far as the voters hands-on, and of course the whole notion no fault absentee will assist in people voting. And as I testified we had a hundred thousand people out of a million registered voters, hundred thousand people casting and or requesting an absentee ballot.

I don't think during that time frame they'll have changes that a hundred thousand people had a reason that were gone from the polling location.
So we see that as increasing and that will eliminate some of the long lines.

However, we eliminate all of the lines potentially determining how the contested races are and the interest in that.

Of course Cuyahoga County, myself, I am for having early voting. Of course that was a constitutional amendment, that was posed before voters and the voters cast nay on the issue.

With regard to hands-on instructions on these voting machines, again, as I indicated in my testimony we will be over 650 demonstrations on these events.

We have gone to major area malls in -- I don't know if you've been to Cleveland recently, but the malls, major malls that I consider major, of course I'm a recent transplant from the west, but Tower City; we've been to Beachwood Mall; we've been to North Olmstead Mall; and Strongsville Mall.

So we have the urban and suburban flavor in all of these to where we can test these machines out, serves dual purposes, No. 1, for the voters to have hands-on experience of the machines and understanding and anticipating if we will have problems and what those problems may be so we can mitigate them.

We've been to CSU Convocation Center for all the basketball games demonstrating the devices. We are at 85 percent of demonstrating devices at all War Club Meetings, working with political parties demonstrating these at all senior centers, as well as hospitals, banks.

Those are the things that we have in place. We will have a Super Sunday where we will be at Hinan's, which I don't know if there is a Hinan's in Columbus or not, but grocery stores.

There is Tops, Giant Eagles, Hinan's, Davis, all of these types of supermarkets we will be at one day to demonstrate these devices.

Going back to the malls. We were there for a full week, from -- starting in Tower City from Wednesday to Friday, other malls we were there from Friday to Sunday.

We kind of take the same motto as what Director Damschroder had stated, we will be on every street corner with these devices to be able to demonstrate them to the public.

Again, part of this we will have our interactive website so the voters have an ability, if they can't physically touch the unit, they have an ability to interactively understand and conceptually understand how it will work. It's all main stream technology, it's not main stream in the voting system aspect of it yet.

But we have an aggressive communication and voter education fund, and we mapped that out. In fact I talked on a daily basis with one of my administrators who addresses specifically voter education and a communication plan.

We have -- we just took on ten individuals, temporary workers for the Board of Elections whose sole purpose is for demonstrating the devices.

As well as we have a staff of five on top of that whose sole purpose is for community outreach.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Thank you, gentlemen. We really appreciate the time and thoughtfulness that you put into preparing for this testimony.

We will now move into the open session. David,
do we have any members of the public who have signed up?

MR. MUSSATT: We have one. Anybody else?

Two.

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: So two. We'll give you time to leave the table and then we'll ask you gentlemen one at a time to come forward. Thank you again, so much, we appreciate it.

(Off the record at 1:06 p.m.)

(Back on the record at 1:12 p.m.)

CHAIRMAN BATTLE: We are reconvened. Mr.
Galfan, would you introduce yourself, and you have five minutes.

MR. GALFAN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

My name is Marty Galfan. I'm a staff representative of Congressman Dennis Kucinich, I work in the Lakewood district office.

And I want to thank you all for being here. I think it's very important that you're here to hear all of the things you've heard the last couple days about what's really going on in Ohio's election process.

The people you heard from, election officials for instance, they have to answer to the law, H.B. 3, HAVA, and that's important that they do their best to make sure that voting is fair here in Ohio and that everything goes as smoothly as possible.

But you all answer to a higher authority, you answer to the U.S. Civil Rights Commission. You're part of that as an advisory committee and also to the Constitution of this country.

We have clauses in our Constitution, we have protections in our Constitution for voters, equal protection clause.

That's not there for no reason. That's there because there were a hundred years of our Republic when African-Americans were enslaved and denied the right to vote.

We have a hundred a years of women being denied the right to vote. We have close to 200 years of our Republic when young people were drafted into wars that couldn't vote for the people who sent them to war.

There is a history of voter suppression, it's not just the Constitution was not the only way it was resolved, and the Constitution didn't solve all of the problems.

Since the equal protection clause and the 13th, 14th, and 15th Amendments, poll taxes were charged, literacy tests were enforced on people to suppress the vote.

It's a history that has gone on in this country since the beginning. And from what you've heard for the last couple of days there is still voter suppression going on.

And it's really up to you to hear that, to digest it and to communicate it to the Commission, to the U.S. Civil Rights Commission, because they are there for a reason, they are there because of our equal protection clause and other laws in the United States to protect the voters and make sure we have fair elections.

Now, I know you've heard from one of the framers of H.B. 3, and he told you that there is fraud going on, that there are people who might be registering to vote under false names. He mentioned George Foreman for instance.

My dad used to bowl with George Foreman, he was a pretty respectable bowler, but he was no heavy weight champion. Guy named George Foreman, you know.

There are people who have similar names, and I think that it's encumbent on the election boards to make sure they have 30 days from the deadline of registration until the election day, and a lot of people register before election day, election boards have large staffs, probably not large enough, they'll argue, but they do have large staffs.

They also have the county prosecutor at their disposal. The 88 county prosecutors in Ohio are there to answer calls from directors of elections boards, that's their job in part.

So if there is fraud going on it should be taken care of. But I don't think we need to suppress votes, suppress voters, to inhibit voters, to make it more difficult to vote.

I think the direction of our election laws in this country from the Constitution to the Voting Rights Act to the other laws that have been passed historically have been to make voting easier for people.

You heard the testimony -- and before H.B. 3, too, for the last several years during the late elections of the last few years, things have been happening that make voting harder for people, and H.B. 3 makes it even harder.

I respect the Board of Elections, I know they do a good job. They are going to do the best they can, but in many ways their hands are tied.

It's important you're here hearing what's going on in Ohio. You have a responsibility to communicate that to the Civil Rights Commission.

The Civil Rights Commission has an obligation under the law and Constitution to make sure that votes are not being suppressed, voters are not being intimidated.

That it's easy for the people of this country,
the citizens of this country to vote, to exercise their democratic rights.

It shouldn't be hard for them. They shouldn't have to pay money to make copies to get the vote out. Voting should be as free as walking and breathing and living their lives, it should not be made difficult.

We do have excellent county employees who can check the veracity of registrations, that is their job, they do it all the time, they do a good job.

The people need to be able to vote in a way that makes it easier for them, not harder. And so I hope that you take this all back to the Civil Rights Commission and make sure this is all heard and digested and they understand what is going on in Ohio, so that something can be done to make voting easier, that's the bottom line, we need to make voting easier, not harder.

Thank you for allowing me to testify, or to comment I should say.
CHAIRMAN BATTLE: Thank you, Sir.
UNIDENTIFIED SPEAKER: I just want to thank you for coming. I have copies of my testimony.
CHAIRMAN BATTLE: That's very kind of you, we've enjoyed it here.

(Thereupon the hearing was adjourned at 1:28 p.m.)

Operator: Thank you for standing by. Good day and welcome to the US Commission on Civil Rights Ohio Advisory Committee conference call. Today's conference is being recorded. At this time, I'd like to turn the call over to Ms. Diane Citrino. Please go ahead, ma'am.

Diane Citrino: Thank you. This meeting of the Ohio Advisory Committee to the US Commission on Civil Rights shall come to order. For the benefit of those in the audience, I'm going to introduce my colleagues and myself. I am Diane Citrino, an attorney working in Cleveland Ohio and the Chair of the Ohio Advisory Committee. Members of the committee on this call are Scott Gerber, Mark Strasser, Edith Thrower and David Tryon. Also present on the call is David [Guerreras 00:00:52], a civil rights analyst for the commission.

The US Commission on Civil Rights is an independent, bi-partisan agency of the federal government charged with studying discrimination, denial of equal protection of the laws or in the administration of justice because of race, color, religion, sex, age, disability or national origin. In each of the 50 states and in the District of Columbia, an advisory committee to the commission has been established and they are made up of responsible people who serve without compensation to advise the commission on relevant information concerning their respective states.

Today, our purpose is to hear testimony regarding voting rights in Ohio. If speaker veer away from this topic to discuss possibly important, but unrelated topics, I'm going to interrupt and ask them to refrain from doing so and to get back on track. I want to repeat what we just heard that this meeting is being recorded and will be transcribed for the public record. I also want to remind everyone that this is a two-part series. This is part one. We will also hear testimony on Friday, March 9th, from 12:00 to 1:30 pm Eastern Standard Time. We hope you will join us for that meeting as well. We are fortunate and thankful to have such a balanced and diverse group of panelists to share with us at both of our meetings.

I also just want to briefly go through the ground rules for today's meeting. This is a public meeting open to the media and general public. We have a very full schedule of people who will be making presentations within a very limited time. The time allotted for each presentation is going to be strictly adhered to. This will include a presentation by each panelist of about 15 minutes. After all the panelists have concluded their statements, the committee members will engage in questions and answers. I will ask our committee members and recognize you and you will ask verbally some questions.

To accommodate people who are not on the agenda, but wish to make statements, we have scheduled one open session today at 12:45. At that time, when indicated by the operator to do so, anyone wishing to make a statement should press *1 on their phone to request that their line be unmuted. In addition, written statements may be submitted by mail to the US Commission on Civil Rights.
Some of the statements today may be controversial. We want to make sure that all the invited guests do not defame or degrade any person or any organization. Again, as chair, I reserve the privilege to cut short any statements that defame, degrade or don't pertain to the issue at hand. In order to ensure that all aspects of the issues are represented, knowledgeable people with a wide variety of experience and viewpoints have been invited to share information with us. Anybody who feels defamed or degraded by statements made in these proceedings may provide a public response during the open comment period. Alternately, such people can file written statements for inclusion in the proceedings. The advisory committee appreciates the willingness of all participants to share their views and experiences with this committee.

Finally, again, the rules for the question and answer portion to the panel are as follows. The committee may ask questions of the entire panel or individual members of the panel after all the panelists have had the opportunity to provide their prepared statement. Advisory committee members must be recognized by the chair before asking any question of the participants. In addition, because of the large number of numbers and short amount of time, each committee member will be limited to one question plus a follow up. When five minutes are left in the session, I will announce that the last question can be asked.

With that, thank you all for being on this call. We’re going to start with Daniel Tokaji, Associate Dean, Ohio State University Moritz College of Law. Dean Tokaji, please begin. Thank you.

Daniel Tokaji: Thank you very much. It's a pleasure and an honor to participate in this hearing and to share information with all of you and learn from all of you about the state of voting rights in Ohio. I'm going to trust, unless someone tells me otherwise, that you're able to see the slide that I'm presenting on the screen. You should currently see a slide that reads Voting Rights in Ohio with my name, Daniel P. Tokaji below it.

What I'm going to do over the course of my remarks this morning is to provide an overview of developments focusing especially on what's been going on here in Ohio in the area of voting rights over the past 12 years or so. It will come as no surprise to those of you who know me that I have strong opinions on some of these things, but for the most part in this presentation, at least in my opening remarks, I'm going to try to keep it descriptive, so talk about what's been happening in the area of voting rights and in particular to talk about lawsuits pertaining to the right to vote in the State of Ohio.
Of course, if you want me to offer my normative views on these subjects, I'd be happy to do so in the question and answer section. Here's the way that I'm going to break down my remarks today. You should now see a slide that says Voting Rights in Ohio with three topics under them. First, I'm going to provide some of the national context for what's been going on starting with a little bit of history and going into some of the developments in recent years throughout the country. This is important by way of context because Ohio is a part of and indeed an important part of an ongoing national conversation about the meaning, import and enforcement of the right to vote.

Next, I want to turn to two different kinds of voting rights claims. First, what are commonly referred to in the literature, the scholarly literature as vote denial claims. This is ... I'll describe ... Has to do with a claim that certain practices impede people from casting a vote or from having their votes counted. I'll talk about vote denial cases in Ohio, which there have been many over the past 12 years or so.

I'll then turn briefly, more briefly, to the subject of vote dilution in Ohio. Vote dilution refers to practices that don't actually prevent or impede people from casting a vote, but may weaken the strength of some people, in particular, some groups' votes, particularly groups that are defined along lines of race or ethnicity. Let me begin with a bit of context. Whenever we talk about the right to vote in Ohio or anywhere else, it's important that we recognize at the outset why it is so important, why it has been regarded as a fundamental right at least by the Supreme Court since the 19th century.

"The political franchise of voting," the court wrote way back in 1886, "is regarded as a fundamental political right because it is preservative of all rights." The idea here is that none of our other interests are safe unless we're able to cast our votes, have them counted and have them weighted in a way that's equal to those of other citizens. To the extent that we're not able to vote or that the votes of some citizens or groups of citizens are diluted, we are that much less citizens because we're not able to protect our interests through the political process and through our government.

The irony of this statement, particularly if you look to the date, is that at the very time that this sentence was written establishing the right to vote as fundamental, the voting rights of African Americans throughout the states of the former Confederacy were being systematically denied through a variety of now infamous practices, literacy tests and often threats and actual violence were used to prevent African Americans, especially in the South, from voting. This is a reminder that all of us should take to heart that the rights that exist in the books of law on the pages of our statute books or even in Supreme Court opinions. That's one thing, but the law as it actually is implemented on the ground is quite another.
In other words, there's often a difference between the law as written and what is actually happening in the real world that is important for us to keep in mind. We see in this history ... Of course, I know this is familiar to you, so I'm not going to waste everyone's time by going through all of it. There have been ebbs and flows with respect to the right to vote over the years. We had an initial period of expansion after the Civil War with the 14th and 15th Amendments followed by its weakening and systematic deprivation of the rights to vote of African Americans throughout the South followed by the Voting Rights Act.

I'll continue the story into the present era, but the big point here is that voting rights don't necessarily move in a straight line. Sometimes we see periods of stasis or even regression followed by periods of progress. These are the two main kinds of voting rights claims in Ohio and around the country that I'm going to be addressing in my remarks.

Historically, vote denial, which is as I mentioned earlier refers to impediments to voting or having one's vote counted included poll taxes, literacy tests. Nowadays, some other practices, like voter ID laws, restrictions on early and absentee voting have been challenged on the grounds that they improperly, illegally deny the vote. Vote dilution, as I mentioned, refers to practices that weaken the strength of a political group like at large elections or gerrymandered districts. This too has been a big concern, especially in recent years.

A historical example of vote denial is the poll tax, which the courts struck down in Harper v. Virginia. Nowadays, we think of the poll tax as a device that was used to exclude African Americans from voting, which it most certainly was, but the court's rationale actually didn't depend on racial discrimination, but on the fact that it excluded people based on their wealth or poverty, which the court said isn't [inaudible 00:13:59] to the ability to participate in democracy.

Moving forward towards the modern era, and this year is the nationwide picture, what we've seen in the last several years, as this graph by my co-author ick [Hasten 00:14:14] shows, is a pretty substantial increase in the quantity of election litigation nationwide going from just around 100 or even less in the years proceeding 2000 to a lot more, up to 361 in 2004, which of course was a very big year here in Ohio especially. In the high 200s or low 300s in recent even numbered years, that is election years.

We've seen overall an increase in litigation in the last 18 years or so, which is in small part due to the Florida 2000 election and to the Bush v. Gore opinion even though it's not been cited by the Supreme Court in the intervening years. That decision and the Supreme Court's intervention in that election has I think had a lot to do with the fact that we've seen a lot more election cases. In Bush v. Gore, the court relied on the equal protection principle that you see here. "Having once granted the right to vote on equal terms, the state may not, by later arbitrary and disparate treatment, value one person's vote over that of another."
Many of the cases that we've seen in recent years have to do with alleged violations of this principle of equality. We've also had Congress of course get into the act most notably through the Help America Vote Act of 2002, which enacted various reforms to the way that elections are run and managed in the United States, including improvement to voting technology, a requirement of state-wide registration with a limited voter identification requirement. Some states, as I'll discuss, have gone much further, and a requirement that provisional ballots be available under some circumstances including where voters appear at the polls and find that their names aren't on the list.

In the courts, the most significant case, at least the most significant decision from the Supreme Court that we've seen in the last several years is the Supreme Court's decision in Crawford v. Marion County Election Board. That decision upheld against the [inaudible 00:16:30] equal protection challenge, Indiana's photo ID law. There was, however, no majority opinion in that case. The justices were basically divided into three groups, which meant that there was no opinion for the court. However, most justices in the Crawford case articulated this standard, which is sometimes referred to as a Anderson Verdict Crawford Standard, named based on the cases from which it derives.

This is basically a form of a balancing standard that lower courts, including those in the Sixth Circuit, have applied in challenges to a variety of voting practices, where the court will determine the character and magnitude of the burden on voting. That includes whether it particularly affects certain groups including poor people or people of color if there's a severe burden then strict scrutiny applied. Most of the time courts have found that there's not a severe burden, but that doesn't mean the state is necessarily off the hook in defending its restrictions or burdens on voting.

The state must still justify the burden by showing that it serves an important regulatory interest. In addition to these claims under the Constitution, we've seen in Ohio and other states over the last several years a number of claims alleging race discrimination and in particular, race discrimination in violation of Section 2 of the Voting Rights Act.

Section 2 of the Voting Rights Act was originally adopted as a part of the original Voting Rights Act in 1965 in response to the activism of Dr. King, who you see here among many others. It was amended in 1982. Before 1982, Section 2, like the 15th Amendment to the United States Constitution was understood to require intentional race discrimination, Section 2 as amended in 1982 allowed a claim to be made of race discrimination based upon a result that is discriminatory. It says that practices that result in the denial or abridgment of the vote on account of race violates Section 2.

As I'll discuss in a few moments, we've seen a lot of cases in recent years under Section 2 especially since the Supreme Court's decision in Shelby County a few years ago that effectively stopped the pre-clearance requirements of a different section of the Voting Rights Act, Section 5. Here's the language from Section 2 that I mentioned earlier. Note that it prohibits practices that result in a denial or abridgment of the right of any citizen to vote on account of race or color.

Sub-section B of Section 2 requires courts to look at the totality of the circumstances. The effect of this is that we tend to have very contextual decisions that look a lot at the history of discrimination in voting and other areas within a particular state as well as the practice's connection to social or historical circumstances that may result in race based disparities and access to the vote.

I just want to mention a few of the recent cases from other states by way of providing context for what's been going on in Ohio since after all courts often look to other courts when they're trying to figure out what the law means and how it should apply. These are three of the biggest ones in the last few years. In North Carolina, the 4th circuit enjoined a law imposing various restrictions on the vote. This was a law that was adopted by that North Carolina legislature shortly after the Shelby County decision. In addition to imposing voter ID, it limited opportunities for early voting and same-day registration and imposed other restrictions.

The court in its opinion found that these requirements were targeted with almost surgical precision at practices, voting opportunities that were used by African Americans and on that basis, they just struck it down as intentionally discriminatory. By contrast, in Wisconsin, the 7th Circuit in an opinion by Judge Easterbrook, upheld a voter ID law that Wisconsin had adopted, although the [inaudible 00:21:25] Circuit also upheld another lower court ruling in a different case that made it easier for people to get the required ID.

Finally, in Texas, there's ongoing litigation regarding that state's voter identification law. The district courts and later the 5th Circuit struck down one version of Texas' voter ID law as being in violation of Section 2 of the Voting Rights Act, although that litigation is still ongoing. We've also seen, again focusing on the nationwide perspective, a lot of activity lately on vote dilution and in particular the revival of so-called racial gerrymandering claims. This is another area where the nationwide developments have some implications for Ohio, as I'll discuss later.

I'm not going to go through all of these three cases in detail, but in Alabama, Virginia and in North Carolina, the court has either allowed equal protection claims to proceed or in the Cooper Case actually struck down districts on the grounds that they're impermissible racial gerrymanders. The claim in particular was that African American voters have been packed into districts that race was the predominant factor and that compliance with the Voting Rights Act didn't justify these concentrated African American districts. You see here the two districts that were struck down in the Cooper case of the state of North Carolina. These by the way are also districts that were subject to racial gerrymandering challenges way back in the 1990s in the Shaw v. Greenoak case.

Now, I want to shift our focus more specifically on what's been going on in Ohio and we've had of course a lot of litigation over voting practices in Ohio, particularly in the 2004 election when these and other areas were the subject of both controversy and litigation. Turning towards the present because I know this was the subject of a hearing many years ago, we've continued to see litigation over various topics in Ohio. I want to specifically focus on three of them.

One of them is provision voting, where there have been various cases over the years, including the Sandusky County Democratic Party case, which upheld against a challenge under the Help America Vote Act, Ohio's rule against counting provisional ballots cast in the wrong precinct. However, in a subsequent case, [inaudible 00:24:30], the 6th Circuit held that it likely violates the equal protection clause to treat some of those wrong precinct provisional ballots differently from others.

Then in a 2012 decision, the 6th Circuit held that it violates both equal protection and due process to reject ballots that were cast in the correct location meaning the correct polling place even if the voter went to the wrong precinct table within that polling place. The bottom line here is that the court has been applying that balancing test from Anderson Verdict Crawford that I mentioned earlier looking very contextually at the burdens imposed by the practices and balancing that against the state's interest. Most recently, we've seen litigation over the counting of provisional ballots. The 6th Circuit reversed the decision of the lower court that had enjoined some of the restrictions on the counting of provisional ballots in the [inaudible 00:25:41] litigation.

Turning to the second area, early and absentee voting, this has also been an area where there's been a lot of activity over the years. Again, not mentioning all of these cases, but in Obama For America v. Husted in 2012, the 6th Circuit invalidated the differential treatment of voters, in particular the differential treatment of military and overseas voters as opposed to other voters with respect to in-person absentee voting, as we call it here, what everybody else calls early voting, finding that that distinction wasn't justified.

We've also seen a lot of litigation here in Ohio over the so-called Golden Week, which was established effectively by statutory amendments back around 2004 and later eliminated by the state legislature. The 6th Circuit had upheld effectively the elimination of Golden Week although there was a settlement in another case, NAACP v. Husted, which allowed early voting in weekends prior to the election.

The final case from Ohio that I want to mention under the heading of vote denial is a case under the National Voter Registration Act, I should mention that I am counsel for the plaintiffs in this case. This is the law that’s commonly known as Motor Voter, although it has a number of other requirements in addition to requiring the voter registration opportunity be made available at motor vehicle, public assistance and disability offices. Among the requirements is that it limits the circumstances in which voters may be removed from the roles.

The case in which I’m one of the attorneys for plaintiffs and is currently before the Supreme Court argues that Ohio’s practice of initiating the removal process based solely on a person’s failure to vote in the previous two years is a violation of the NVRA. The Supreme Court heard argument on this case earlier this year and were expecting a decision by the summer.

I’m going to just briefly ... Because I know I’m about out of time ... Going to turn to the subject of vote dilution. We haven’t had any racial gerrymandering challenges in Ohio yet, but it’s certainly conceivable that we could. This is a current redistricting plan in Ohio, which as you’ll note, includes 12 districts from which Republicans have been elected since they were drawn [inaudible 00:28:20] from which Democrats have been elected. One of those districts, the 11th Congressional District, which is an 80% Democratic district roughly speaking and about a 52% African American district, at least at the point where it was drawn, this is a district that I think is quite likely subject to a racial gerrymandering challenge under the Cooper decision out of North Carolina that I mentioned earlier. Race was almost certainly the predominant factor in drawing this district and its boundaries almost certainly could not be defended as necessary under the Voting Rights Act.

For proponents of redistricting requirements, there’s a bit of good news here, which will provide a nice segue, I’m sure, to Catherine’s presentation. There will be a measure appearing on the ballot this spring that would reform the process for drawing the state’s congressional districts. There have been several attempts at redistricting reform over the years including a 2012 measure that I was involved in. Back in 2015, the process for drawing state legislative districts and this May, a measure will appear on the ballot that would reform the process for drawing the congressional districts, a new process that I suspect would do much better in terms of preventing vote dilution and other practices that might be deemed a violation of either the constitutional or statutory right to vote.

Sorry if I’ve gone over, but I will stop there and turn it over to Catherine.

Diane Citrino: Thank you Dean Tokaji. This is Diane Citrino, the chair, introducing now our next presenter, Catherine Turcer. She’s the Executive Director of Common Cause Ohio. Catherine has served on Ohio’s Help America Vote Act advisory committee. Since 2012, she’s helped coordinate a non-partisan election protection program in Ohio, which is done in coordination with the Lawyers Committee for Civil Rights Under Law. Catherine, please take it away.
Hi everybody. I'm so pleased to be able to talk to you today about voting in Ohio. Common Cause has been around since Watergate. We've focused on being the people's lobby, and we're really committed to accessible elections and the notion that everyone should be able to have a voice and have open and accountable government. I thought I'd start out with what are some things that actually we do fairly well? Ohio has actually bucked the national trend of strict voter ID. Ohioans can still use a number of different forms of identification including usual license, that kind of thing.

You can also use a utility bill. We also have a period of what we think of as early in person voting. It's actually in the law called no fault absentee voting, and approximately one third of Ohioans actually take advantage of this early vote period. Ohioans can register to vote and update their voter registration. That started January this year. We have that ability to do that fairly easily, which is very important. The other thing that I think we should always think about is that folks who are not incarcerated are permitted to vote. Those are some of the things that I think Ohio actually does well.

When we think of that early voting in person period, that is something that really came about because citizens were collecting signatures. They put pressure on the state legislature and the legislature in 2005 instituted this early vote period. There are a number of different times where the actions of citizens have made a difference in our ability to vote. I know Dan hit on a number of different lawsuits. The tail of voting in Ohio often has a lot to do with all of these different lawsuits.

As we think about election administration in Ohio, I also think there's some things that we actually do fairly well. We do have truly bi-partisan election administration like Noah's Arc, the Democrats and Republicans vote two by two, which in fact leads to greater accountability. You don't have a person of one party examining or doing audits. Everything's two by two. The fact that we have voter verified paper audit trails on the touchscreens, it enables voters to confirm their vote and helps people feel more confident.

The other thing that's fairly new is that voters are now able to track receipt of their absentee ballot. If you were going to vote by mail, you can actually see, "Okay, I put an application in. Now it's on its way. It'll be to me in a few days. You can see where in the process it is." This has actually helped to improve voter confidence.

I started with what are we doing well and what are the good things? Dan Tokaji hit on the fact that we have a stricter purging standard in Ohio right now. I called use it or lose it. We are one of the most aggressive states for purging voters from the voter roll for not actually going to vote. The Secretary of State, Jon Husted, has established this practice where they mail a postcard to voters who haven't voted within a two-year period asking them basically to confirm their registration. Voters who fail to respond or vote within the following four-year period are removed from the roll.

What does this actually mean? In advance of 2016's election, tens of thousands of voters, primarily African Americans from urban areas, were removed from the voter roll despite actually still being eligible to vote. As we know, people are much more excited about voting when it comes to presidential elections. Not choosing to vote can actually be a way to exercise your first amendment rights as well. I'm not sure what's going happen. My guess is if you have questions about how things are going with the case, we'll find out about that. I'd ask questions to Dan about this, but we really have to wonder. The aggressive purging, does it actually violate the National Voter Registration Act? Does it violate the Help America Vote Act?

We will find out, but there were certainly people all over the state who went to vote that didn't have any sense that it was a use it or lose it kind of situation that found that in fact they could not cast a vote. One of the things that I see as problematic when it comes to voting in Ohio is that all the counties are treated equally, but the voters are not necessarily treated equally. For example, all counties are permitted to have only one location for early in person voting hours. They're limited hours. They have basically what you would think of as business hours and then they extend it just a little bit and there's some weekend hours that final weekend.

Because each county has this kind of situation, what happens is there are very long lines at urban boards of elections especially on the weekend before presidential elections because of course a smaller county, a less populace county just doesn't have the same kind of needs as the more populace counties.

The other thing to think about is several urban counties have traditionally set absentee ballot applications, vote by mail applications to voters every year as a fairly ... It's a cost effective way. You encourage early voting. Makes it a lot easier actually on election day, but in 2014, the state legislature passed a bill and under our new law, absentee ballot applications can only be made by the Secretary of State if the legislature appropriates the money to do so. This adversely impacts folks in those urban counties because of course they're more likely to participate in really long lines and to have the problems that you have with those long lines, where people get discouraged. They make choices about leaving and they don't have as easy access as the more rural voters. There are some other challenges that Ohio's facing. I'm going to talk about those very quickly.

Our voting machines are aging. We would like to have new voting machines. There is in fact a bill that was proposed to help fund new funding apparatus, but it is not part of the capital budget, which is not the traditional way we do these things. Basically, you have to pass the capital budget, but you don't actually have to pass one that just focuses on the voting machines. It can be very helpful to actually have that in the capital budget. I’m a little worried about whether this will come to fruition or not, which can have an impact on voters all over. It can adversely impact some counties over others just because of resources that the counties are able to bring to bear to purchase those machines.

The other thing is because of lawsuits and back and forth and some of the changes of voting rules over time, we actually do need to have good education and information coming from the Secretary of State’s office. Especially now that we have this online voter registration, we should be able to have good education coming from the Secretary of State’s office, but last year in the state operating budget funds, there were zero dollars, no funds were set aside for voter registration.

The other thing to highlight is the electronic poll books, which can make things move much more smoothly, can also create problems. In Montgomery County Daton area in 2016, there was a lot of confusion with these new electronic poll books or e-poll books. It led to these really long lines. The election before, they’d had a similar problem in Hamilton County, where Cincinnati is. The state legislature is actually considering reducing the number of poll workers. There’s a tail of voting that has to do with all of the different lawsuits that happen, but there are on a regular basis truly, truly awful bills proposed that we need as election advocates to push back on and to be sure that our legislatures are really thoughtful about any changes they make.

One of the recent changes that they made ... [inaudible 00:39:52] about a year and a half, so not too recent. There was a legislation basically changing it so you had to have a driver’s license from Ohio, which would have adversely impacted college students and young people. Simple changes that they think about making can make a difference. Then there are some simple changes that could actually make voters have more confidence and be invited into voting.

One thing that we have and that we mentioned earlier is these voter verify paper audit trails, which can be really useful for auditing purposes. The voter can confirm how they voted, make sure that it was cast correctly, identify problems with the machine and yet poll workers do not actually show this part of the machine to people who’ve come to vote. A simple change if ... Obviously, we’re going to these new machines. It could be we’ll be doing optical scans, but it seems like even when we put something good in place and we pass legislation to address better auditing, some of the simple thing is not included.

I realize this impacts all voters, but certainly many of the populace counties have these optical ... They don’t have optical scan machines. They have these touch screen machines. The other thing to know is infrequent voters are moved to an inactive list. Before they’re actually pulled from the roll, they’re moved to the inactive list.
In 2016, 13% of registered voters were deemed to be inactive. This means that 1 million voters did not receive information about vote by mail, so they were treated completely differently, where you would think, "Hey, these are voters who are not participating. We don't really know why, but we want to invite them into the process, not make it more difficult."

We also need to be thinking about much better education for Ohioans so that they know they can vote even if they have a felony on their record. No state is truly an island. There are states around us where people who have felonies on their record are not permitted to cast a ballot. Here in Ohio, if you are not currently incarcerated, you can actually go and vote. Unfortunately, there's some misinformation about this that it is a real barrier to people, especially for those voters of color.

I think we've come a long line ... Tripping over my own tongue everybody, sorry.
We've come a long way since the long lines of 2004, but sometimes I worry that we've gotten just far enough away from it that we start to think about reducing poll workers and we start to think about making changes that are not in the voters best interest. As we move forward, I think we need to do this in as transparent a way as possible. We need to have these kinds of conversations so that voters understand what information is out there.

My biggest ... I'm going to leave you with this. My biggest takeaway that I hope I'm leaving you with is that we need much better education about voting coming out of the Secretary of State's office and boards of election. I'd like to say thank you very much again. I'm going to hand it over. Diane.

Diane Citrino: Thank you Catherine. That was a wonderful presentation, very inspiring. I'm going to now ask our final panelist, Kerstin Sjoberg-Witt, Director of Advocacy and the Assistant Executive Director at Disability Rights Ohio, to present. She directs and manages all client advocacy work at Disability Rights Ohio, which covers a wide range of issues from discrimination to access to services to investigating abuse and neglect for persons with disabilities. She's also actively involved in systemic litigation including two class actions pending in Ohio. With that, I'd like to turn it over to you.

Kerstin S-W.: Thank you Diane, and thanks to the committee for having me here today to talk about voting and what the experiences and issues that Ohioans with disabilities face when it comes to exercising that fundamental right to vote. Just a little bit about us as an organization, we are a not for profit. Our mission is to advocate for the legal and civil and human rights of people with disabilities in Ohio. We're also what's called the protection advocacy system and the client assistance program. Those are programs that are designated by the governor. We've been designated as the protection advocacy system and client assistance program since their inception in the '80s. We've kept that designation even through a name and structural change when we moved from Ohio Legal Rights Service, which is an independent state agency, to our not for profit status in 2012 as Disability Rights Ohio.

We received federal grant dollars to do most our work and some private foundation dollars as well. Our work, we advocate without cost to our clients on a wide range of issues as Diane noted earlier. One of those is of course voting work. One of our federal grants is specific to voting. It was money that was set aside when the Help America Vote Act was passed and it’s the Protection Advocacy for Voting Assistance, or PAVA, grant. That allows us to dedicate some of our resources solely to the issue of voting rights. We have other funding that we can use to also advocate for individuals based on other eligibility criteria, but we primarily use our PAVA grant for voting related work.

I think Catherine pointed out a really important aspect, which is voter education. That’s one of the things we focus on a lot with our PAVA grant. We do a lot of education outreach to voters with disabilities. We try to go to places where they are and particularly places where they may have been isolated from society because it’s an institutional setting like a psychiatric hospital. We also operate a voter hotline and provide individual client advocacy on a as needed basis. When it’s appropriate to do so, we engage in systemic policy advocacy with the administration or the legislature as appropriate and occasionally litigation when necessary as well.

How do voting rights fit into disability rights? Obviously, the right to vote is a fundamental. Right to vote should not be taken away and we should not create barriers that unduly interfere with the ability to exercise that. The Americans With Disabilities Act, which many of you I’m sure are familiar with, was passed not just to eliminate discrimination in its normal discriminatory intent form, but also to remove barriers from participation in society. Its goal was indeed the full participation of people with disabilities in all areas of society, which obviously voting is a key aspect of that.

There are broad protections already under federal law beyond even the Americans With Disabilities Act, although voting rights that has been discussed earlier also do protect the access to the ballot by people with disabilities.
Obviously, implementation practice is not always as smooth as the laws themselves and some antiquated notions about the capabilities of persons with disabilities still persist and provide barriers as well.

We’ve focused our work at Disability Rights Ohio on trying to address the voting barriers that people with disabilities have faced in Ohio, and we’ve seen a couple of issues emerge over the last decade that I’d like to touch on. One of them is stereotypes and the potential for discrimination in our own constitution.
You may have heard recently that there was a modernization committee looking at our constitution, which was a great idea. We have some antiquated language in there.
This is one example of some very antiquated and offensive language in our constitution. It’s one of the only outright exclusionary aspects for voter qualification in the Ohio Constitution. It says that, “No idiot or insane person shall be entitled to the privileges of an elector.” We advocated with the modernization commission to remove that language from our Ohio Constitution. We noted that it conflicts with federal laws that protect the right to vote and pointed out just how [inaudible 00:49:21] the concept of capacity to vote is.

There’s been very little case law or research on this issue, but to the extent that there has been, it’s generally found that voting is primarily emotional rather than rational and to try to identify whether someone has the capacity to vote is virtually impossible to do and we should not be making presumptions about someone simply because they have a disability, but they don’t have the capacity to vote.

While many of the members of the commission agreed with us, unfortunately for a variety of other political reasons I’m sure, that change was not made. We were not successful. Fortunately, even though these antiquated and offensive terms exist in our constitution, the impact in Ohio law in practice is fairly minimal to non existent. There’s only one Ohio statute that even addresses this issue and it allows for probate court judges to adjudicate someone incompetent for the purposes of voting and it actually even theoretically limited individuals subject to involuntary hospitalization in a psychiatric hospital.

As a general rule, we have never seen a situation where a probate court actually exercised his authority. However, in recent years, there have been some changes to application forms that an individual can fill out to ask that a guardian be appointed for an individual and those new application forms in some courts
... Not all the probate courts use the same form ... Have a check box about voting and we have a concern.

We’ve not yet seen it rise to an actual issue, but a concern that someone could make the argument in the future that if that box is checked and the person seeking guardianship of someone else thinks that they shouldn’t be able to vote, the fact that they are then later appointed as guardian even if that issue is never discussed or addressed or evaluated in any manner in the guardianship process, that they would try to exclude them from the ability to vote. We would argue that that would be a significant violation of their fundamental right to vote and of due process. So far, we haven’t seen that, and we hope not to, but we do raise it as an issue to be aware of.

Stereotypes and misinformation abound when we go out to speak with individuals with disabilities and many of them have care providers as well. One of the most common things we hear is that they don’t believe a person can vote because they have a guardian. That’s simply not true. Having a guardian has no impact on your ability to vote unless you have been adjudicated and competent for purposes of voting, which I just discussed how that generally never occurs.

Other misconceptions out there, if you can't verbally communicate, how can you understand enough to vote? Again, people with disabilities, some of them may communicate in a different way. Could be because they're deaf and they use American Sign Language. It could be because they have another disability that impacts their verbal communication, but they are quite capable of reasoning and speaking and understanding and making their wishes known in other ways if we provide them the capacity to do so through assisted technology or other methods of communication.

Another misconception is if you're blind, how could you independently complete a ballot? Obviously, there are many forms of technology that can make that happen independently and presumptions about individuals that are blind still unfortunately exist. Moving on then to some of the barriers that have been noted over the years, polling locations, I have to say that Ohio has made significant progress in having physically acceptable polling locations. Part of the way they went about doing this was using the Help America Vote Act money in a positive way. I want to give some credit to the Federal Trade States Office for doing that over the last decade.

Another way that they went about it, which had some negative impact as well, is actually combining polling locations to ensure that they were using locations that were already accessible and they didn't have to make temporary modifications for the election itself. That has unfortunately led to polling locations being further away and transportation more difficult. Within polling locations themselves, again, they're generally accessible although because of the way machines are set up, they are sometimes too close together and hard to access particularly for people using wheelchairs.

This dovetails with the next issue. If poll workers need more information on how to work with people with disabilities, how to set up a polling location and how to use the machines effectively, there's not a lot of data on the experience of the voters with disabilities, but the limited data that's available from some informal surveying we've done and some work done by Self-Advocates Becoming Empowered, a group called SABE, they've identified issues with poll workers and the set up of polling locations.

Moving on ... I see I'm starting to run out of time. Voting information and registration information needs to be accessible to people with disabilities and until recently the Secretary of State's website was not accessible for individuals that would use screen access software so generally individuals with a vision impairment, but it could include individuals that don't use a mouse, for example, and need to use other types of software in accessing electronic information on a computer.
We filed a lawsuit on behalf of the National Federation of the Blind. In early 2017, the court ordered the Secretary of State to fix their website to make it accessible. Recent testing by the National Federation of the Blind shows that much of the website is now accessible including the new online registration and the Secretary of State's office is continuing to work to remediate any few existing problems.

Another issue in that same lawsuit was related to ballots in our absentee paper ballot system. Those paper ballots, the reliance or paper ballots had a discriminatory impact on people that were blind and that they need electronic means to complete the ballot.

There are electronic ballot marking tools, but the state initially was resistant to implementing that. We litigated that up to the 6th Circuit and soon after the 6th Circuit basically set our case to go forward. The Secretary of State decided to fix the problem and has now ordered all counties to implement an accessible ballot marking tool by the November election of this year.

Another area that is a problem generally, but obviously impacts voting is just the lack of adequate accessible transportation. Many individuals with disabilities rely on others for transportation. There's often few public transportation that's available in many voting areas.

As I noted earlier, many people with disabilities have spent at least a short time, if not a long portion of their life in an institution, thousands of individuals have spent some portion of their time in institutions. For some, that's long term, like in a nursing home or individuals with developmental disabilities. There's about 5,000 that are in institutions for developmental disabilities, but some of that is just short term, emergency hospitalization or shorter term stays in a psychiatric hospital.

Ohio actually has some pretty good procedures in general for people that are hospitalized on election day and aren't able to get to the polls, but we have identified through our work a problem for voters who are hospitalized outside of their county, which is primarily individuals in psychiatric hospitals because of the way in which our psychiatric hospitals are set up across the state. We identified this first in 2012 when a young woman who'd been recently hospitalized outside of her county called us. She had requested an absentee ballot, but not received it. We were trying to help her vote. We had to file an emergency lawsuit, which we won, but unfortunately, even with that win, the problems still persisted as we discovered in 2016.

Since that time, we have worked with the Secretary of State's office to try to fix the issue, and I say we've narrowed the gap significantly, but it has not been fully resolved. In the November 2016 election, the Secretary of State did start a new process, a new directive to county boards and a new form that would allow individuals that were hospitalized outside of their county to get a ballot. The Secretary of State was providing direction to the boards of election on how to do that.

The provision, this option is very narrow. It only allows individuals who have been hospitalized after the absentee ballot deadline, which is the Saturday at noon prior to election day, to use this process. Interestingly enough, that is much more narrow than the actual statutory language that allows for voting when someone has an unexpected hospitalization.

We have argued that this does not comply with the Americans With Disabilities Act, which requires modification to state policies in order to ensure access to the ballot. In the general election 2016, we had calls from over 20 hospitals from individuals that were facing the situation and helped about 50 individuals by providing them advice on this process. Many were able to resolve it on their own with working with their county boards of election, but for about 13 individuals, we had to get directly involved and work with the Secretary of State's office to get them access to a ballot. Those were all resolved. They were allowed to vote, but unfortunately many people never even call us. They don't know about this process or even if they do, the form is so narrow and restrictive that they may not realize they can access it. We still have this problem today. We're working to try to fix it, but the current status is that we have this rigid deadline and no process for accommodations under the Americans With Disabilities Act as needed.

That's a good segue then to just looking at what kind of means for accommodation there are and what people might need in order to access the polls. Obviously, the Americans With Disabilities Act, it provides that modification to policies and practices should be made to ensure equal access. I've talked about the most significant issue we've worked on in that area, but some other things that individuals with disabilities might need in order to vote include a personal assistance with voting.

As a general rule, this works fairly well. They may have a family member, friend or service provider that can help them vote or they can access help at the polls with two poll workers one from each party assisting them. Occasionally, we run into problems because service providers are mistaken as an agent of their employee and that's prohibited under state law, but as a general rule, it works fairly well.

There's other things that have been done to try to make voting more accessible, curbside voting for example, accessible voting machines. All of these are great tools that the State of Ohio has put into place to help ensure access to the ballots. Really it comes back down then to making sure that there's good poll worker education and voter education so that people know that these tools are available and how to access them.
One thing that we've also seen a problem with is the interactions. Some people with disabilities may have trouble physically signing their name or their signature may significantly vary from time to time when they sign it because of their disability. It's important that there be alternative options beyond the very narrow option of designating a power of attorney for voting, which Ohio law also permits. Individuals should be allowed to use other options for signing their name if they're not physically able to do so. That's an area where we've had to do significant education and advocacy on a case by case basis to help individuals vote.

Unfortunately, even with all the progress over the years in general with people with disabilities getting into the workplace and becoming full participants of society, there is still a disproportionate number of individuals with disabilities that are lower income and many living in poverty. There is a disproportionate impact of all of the barriers that go along with poverty when it comes to voting. We've talked a lot about identification laws. Just the cost of getting photo identification can sometimes be problematic for individuals with limited means. The lack of access to affordable public transportation is certainly a barrier to voting whether it's in person early voting or day of election voting.

Lack of permanent housing or homelessness is an issue as well. You certainly can vote even if your residence is a homeless shelter, but it does make it more challenging and many individuals are not aware of how they can go about doing that. There's talk about the voter purge efforts. That's certainly a problem that often disproportionately impacts individuals that are living in poverty that may move around, may not receive their mail, may not vote in every election and certainly people with disabilities, who may find it difficult to vote and perhaps only vote in presidential elections as a result. They're going to be impacted by this as well and it then creates a new barrier because now they have to go through the process of re registering to vote.

Just to wrap up then, I mentioned earlier that we have a voter hotline. Every general election and some primary elections as well, we're open for our voter hotline the same hours as the polls. We have staff that are trained to answer pretty much any of the most common questions, which is usually where am I registered to voting? What polling location should I go to? We have attorneys all day long available to follow up on legal concerns.

This has been a pretty successful model. We get dozens of calls in every major election. Last election, we had about 60 calls on a variety of issues and were able to help most people solve and resolve their problem quickly. I just wanted to share one success story from the last election that we had a ... Last November, so the last general election. We had an individual, I've given you the link to our success story on our website. He was in an institution for individuals with development disabilities. He wanted to vote. He asked the staff to help him get to the polls. For whatever reason, they were telling him that the elections had already happened the day before.
He called us and we got on the phone with the staff, and we called the person in charge of the institution and we kept following up until we got confirmation from him that he had indeed been taken to vote. He was obviously quite excited that he had been able to vote and that we were able to help him. There's a picture of him here holding the phone that he used to call us, and a link to the story about this individual and how we were able to help him vote. Thank you for having me participate, to speak about the experience of voters with disabilities. I'd be happy to answer any questions that the committee have.

Diane Citrino: Great. Thank you very much. Thank you to all three of our panelists. This was very informative. I'm going to now first turn it over to members of the committee, who can ask questions to our panelists. When that questioning period is over, which will be about 10 minutes of committee member questions, it will be turned over to the public for comment and questions. I believe we have three members of the committee on the call. Is there someone who has a question?

Edith Thrower: This is [crosstalk 01:06:04].

Scott Gerber: Hi Diane, this Scott. Go ahead Edith. You can go before me.

Edith Thrower: Good afternoon everyone. This is Edith Thrower. I have a question of the second panelist. You may have said this, so pardon me if you did and have to repeat it, but I would like to know. I'm really curious about the purging of electors who have not been active ... I believe you said in a period of four years ... From the election rolls or rosters or records of municipalities or counties in Ohio.

I kind of understand ... I kind of like it and I kind of don't because it could serve as an incentive to get people to voting or not. The flip side of that is that you're removing people from voting records and there's really no good reason for it. My question is what is the purpose, strategy or logic behind purging the records? You may have said it, so again excuse me if you did.

Catherine T.: Hello, this is Catherine. I'm guess that Dean Tokaji will actually be able to add more to this point. Basically, what the Secretary of State does is that if someone doesn’t vote within a two-year period, they basically ask them to confirm their registration. If that voter doesn’t respond or cast a ballot within the following four years, they’re removed from the voter roll. It’s a six-year period. The reason that the Secretary of State actually goes through this process, or at least this is what he said and actually a lot of this makes sense, is that the voter rolls end up having a lot of people who did not inform the board of election and the Secretary of State that they moved.

What happens is you just get so many different people on there who are not actually voters. It becomes more difficult to actually manage the election, so having what they call clean voter rolls so that you know who the voters are, it just makes it easier to manage. The folks that argue that people should be taken off the roles fairly quickly because they don't participate are thinking, "How can we make our database, our voter rolls as clear and as easy as possible to make election management as simple as possible?"

The folks like me that are like, "Well, wait a second. Use it or lose it, let's give it a little bit more time. Let's see what we can do try to bring folks into the process." I feel for the people that are concerned about those voter rolls, but at the end of the day, voting is a fundamental right. Telling people who actually registered and believe that they're registered, that they cannot return to voting so quickly is problematic. Dan, is there something you wanted to add?

Diane Citrino: Dean Tokaji, can you address that?

Daniel Tokaji: Sure. Let me respond to this from a legal perspective. As I mentioned earlier, but want to reiterate, I am one of the attorneys for the plaintiffs, respondents in the case regarding this issue that is currently before the Supreme Court. That's the Husted v. A. Philip Randolph Institute Case. Of course, as with all of my remarks, what I'm going to say represents my own views. I'm not speaking on behalf of the Ohio State University or any other institution of which I'm a part.

As a matter of law, the National Voter Registration Act, also known as Motor Voter, was designed to ensure not only that registration opportunities were made available, but that people weren't purged from the rolls without a very good reason. One of the good reasons, of course, is that someone has moved. The argument of the Secretary of State's office throughout the course of this case has been primarily that they are using the failure to vote as a proxy for having moved. That in our view is contrary to the plain language of the National Voter Registration Act, which says that you can't remove people by virtue of their failure to vote. Moreover, if the state's goal is to remove people from the registration [inaudible 01:11:08] actually moved, there are much better ways of doing that.

For example, you could rely on information from another state database like the Motor Vehicle records, which show that somebody has moved from one place to another. You could rely on information from another state. If Indiana, for example, were to provide information through a national information sharing system and these things do exist that tells Ohio that someone has moved from Ohio to Indiana. You could use that as a basis for initiating the removal process. Ohio or local boards of election could also send a mailing and if that mailing is returned as undeliverable because the person is believed to have moved, then Ohio could use that as a basis for initiating the removal process. As you all know, county boards of elections frequently do send information to voters. What Ohio can't do in our view is use the failure to vote as a proxy for having moved and on that basis initiate the purge process.

Diane Citrino: Great, thank you. I'm going to allow ... I believe I heard Scott Gerber from the commission.
Scott Gerber: Yes, thank you.

Diane Citrino: Wanted to ask a question?

Scott Gerber: Yes, thank you, Diane, and thanks to the panelists for such wonderful presentation. I have a comparative and normative question to all of the panelists. The US commission is studying voting rights at the national level. Ohio is obviously a critical state in presidential elections in particular. I just wondered if people could give us a sense of how Ohio compares to other states in terms of our approach to voting rights making it easy, making it too difficult, and then how Ohio is doing now as compared to ten years ago or whatever. Any thoughts on that would be appreciated.

Daniel Tokaji: It's a great question. Why don't I lead off with some preliminary thoughts? I guess the first caveat I'd provide is that it can be really difficult to compare states because each state has its own electoral ecosystem. The way people vote from state to state tends to vary quite a lot. For example, there are some states in which a lot of people rely on early voting, some states in which very few people do, where some are in the middle on that point.

I think there are some respects in which we're doing okay. For example, we have avoided the imposition of a strict government-issued photo ID requirement in contrast to states such as Texas, Wisconsin, and Indiana. I think that is a good thing. We've avoided that barrier to voting. On the other hand, Ohio’s practices regarding purges compare unfavorably to most other states.

On the front of early voting and, in particular, same day registration, we've actually moved backwards in the last few years. There was a period of time during which we had a window for same day registration and early voting, the so-called Golden Week between 35 and 30 days before the election, which has been taken away.

There's been progress in some respects, but in others, we've moved backwards. A final note on the subject of vote dilution and manipulation of redistricting, there's some good news there. I think it's really quite extraordinary that Democrats and Republicans in the Ohio legislature were able to come together on both state and legislative redistricting and most recently congressional redistricting. That has important voting rights implications. I guess the bottom line is it's a mixed bag, progress on some things, but regression in other areas. There are some places where we're better than other states, but others where we're worse.

Diane Citrino: This is Diane Citrino. I'm sorry to interrupt. I'm going to get back to this and allow Catherine and Kerstin to comment on this question, but first because we have a mandated by public publication that the public portion of this is to start at 12:45, I'm going to check with the operator to see if there are members of the public who would like to ask a question or make a statement. If not, we will... return ... We will ask this public portion to be ... This will be for a set of period of time and then we are going to return so Catherine and Kerstin, you can have a chance to think on that and also I will give an opportunity to Mark Strasser to ask any questions they have. I'd like to check with the operator, is there anyone on the line who would like to ask a question or make a statement?

Operator: Thank you ma'am. If you'd like to signal for a question on the phone, please press the star key followed by the digit one. Again, it is *1 to signal. Please be sure your mute function's on to allow that signal to reach our equipment. We'll pause just a moment to assemble our roster.

Diane Citrino: Thank you.

Operator: There are currently no questions in queue. Again, *1 to signal.

Diane Citrino: Okay, well then we will go back to Catherine. If you, followed by Kerstin, would like to comment on the question Scott Gerber has posed.

Catherine T.: This is Catherine. I think that Dan covered it very well. I think the fact that we have a fairly long period of early vote is quite good. The fact that we don't have strict voter ID is one of the things that I think Ohio does well. One of the things that we didn't cover in a lot of detail ... I alluded to it ... Is that there are many times that the state legislature ... There will be bills there to make things more difficult. There has been a tug of war back and forth on how best to invite people into the process or basically make things a little bit harder for people to vote. It wasn't that long ago that there was legislation ... We're talking about 2011, where it would have greatly reduced early vote. It would have made just much stricter voter ID. There were a variety of different problems with this new election law.

Voters collected signatures to stop the legislation in its path to do what they call a referendum. Ohio's one of those direct democracy states. Fortunately, the legislature of their own volition basically polled the legislation. They went through a legislative process to make sure it wasn't implemented, but it is a bit of an arm wrestling to keep the advances that we make.

Also, when I think about how long it took for us to get online voter registration.
Generally, online voter registration would have made life much easier during 2016 and would have made it much easier for folks to participate and that was not implemented until January 1 of this year. You think to yourself, "Wait a second. What's going on that it took so long." There just is always a struggle.

Diane Citrino: Great. Kerstin, if you have some comments?

Kerstin S-W.: I think, as I had mentioned earlier, Ohio has done several things using their Help America Vote Act funding, for example, to help increase physical accessibility, polling locations. We've had success and opened a better dialog I believe with the Secretary of State's office on accessibility issues for electronic information and things like the new online voter registration have moved forward in its new fashion in that respect. Even at the local level, we've had some dialog with county boards of elections, for example, the Franklin County Board of Elections reached out to us recently. They're looking at getting new machines. It was talked about earlier. There's variable machines in Ohio.

Before they decided on what type of machines to get, they wanted input from the disability community about accessibility and usability features. We were able to pull together some stakeholders to go and meet with the board of elections and even view some of the possible options with the board of elections. I think there's been an increasing willingness to consider accessibility issues generally and an ability to work with the local and state officials on many issues, notwithstanding the fact that we still have disagreements on some of the items such as the out of county hospitalization issue that I talked about earlier. I think the dialog is there and we have been able to resolve most of our smaller issues even if we can't always make the wider policy changes that we may want.

Speaker 8: To follow up on that, I just had a quick follow up. We heard about the lack of money for training of poll workers. I would imagine that would affect people with disabilities in Ohio particularly. Can you, Kerstin and Catherine, address the funding issue and what impact that has or doesn't have?

Catherine T.: This is Catherine. One of the things that I was surprised about last cycle when they did the operating budget that the secretary basically zeroed out his budget saying that basically setting aside no funding for voter education. When we start to think about what that means and the challenges, for example, for counties that may need to have good voter education so that you're able to administer these elections more smoothly and you get accurate accounts and all of those kinds of things are problematic.

We also need to think about, well, it's possible that, in fact, the legislature will move the bill that will give some funding for machines, but we also know that the whole conversation about reducing the number of poll workers is all about saving some money. It's all about the cost of poll workers. It continues to be a challenge to make sure that we make democracy a priority for funding.

Kerstin S-W.: This is Kerstin. Just to follow up on that, I actually did not know about the zeroing out of funding until Catherine mentioned it today, but I agree that it's very problematic to not have any money directed towards voter education, especially with the many different ways to vote and the changes that have happened over the years. With respect to poll workers specifically, in our not very scientific, but the data that's available to, surveys, as well as information gathered by the organization SABE, poll worker education was identified and poll workers interactions were identified as one of the most prevalent problems in terms of maybe ... It was a wide range. Some individuals, it was a matter of the poll worker not being real adept at using the exceptional machine. It could be a matter of how the polling location had been set up because, again, they were not thinking about accessibility in terms of moving around and using the machines. It may have been simply a feeling that they were not being treated with respect or that they were taking up too much time.

There were a variety of different experiences and some of those are a little bit hard to get at even with training. My understanding is the Secretary of State's office actually does have some pretty good videos for training poll workers and interacting with individuals with disabilities, but it's not clear to me whether those are used consistently in the poll worker trainings across the different county settings. We don't really have that information directly. The last time I personally was in a poll worker training was a decade ago and my recollection is there was very little training, if any, on interacting with people with disabilities and the amount of information that is packed into that training is kind of overwhelming really for someone if they aren't a poll worker, many times for newer poll workers.

I think fortunately we do have a lot of people who are dedicated to being poll workers and at least know the basics of the process. It may be one way to deal with the problem of access for people with disabilities would be to think about having disability liaisons at polling locations, a poll worker that had a little extra training and emphasis on that, rather than trying to train every poll worker on every issue.

Diane Citrino: Thank you. I'm going to just ask the operator one more time to just make sure there's no member of the public who has dialed in. Can you check for us, please?

Operator: Yes, ma'am. We have had someone signal. We have a S.C Patterson with Self-Advocates Becoming Empowered.

Diane Citrino: Okay. Ms. Patterson, would you like to ask a question or make a comment at this time?

S.C Patterson: Yes, I would. Can you hear me?

Diane Citrino: Yes.

Essie Pederson: Great. I would just like to comment on the fact that I think that this hearing and this committee is covering a very important topic. I have learned a great deal about the systems and the process and the changes that have been made. What Self-Advocates Becoming Empowered has looked at is how the individuals who are using those processes, systems, equipment [inaudible 01:26:41] not ideal, they have had a good voting experience. We have been collecting data for the last eight years about these experiences and we're getting more and more. I know that you had some interest in progress that Ohio has made. Just a little thing about people's disabilities to indicate progress or our difference is that this year, the method of voting that people were using, the polling location [inaudible 01:27:15] % of Ohioans that we interviewed said the polling location is it.

For the absentee mailed-in ballots, it was 40% [inaudible 01:27:24] that the average voter, there are about one third of them that voted early with people with disabilities is only 58% in Ohio that are doing that. It is higher than that nationally. It is one third nationally, but in Ohio, it's lower. I think Kerstin's done an excellent job of pointing out some of the barriers as to why that is happening.

With all these changes and the evolution, the important thing to pick up here is that people are gravitating towards using the absentee mail-in ballot and early voting more and they're pulling away from the polling locations because in 2014, 80% of the voters used the polling location. I think that's a significant change. I encourage the fact that the technology be looked at very closely and the absentee ballot be looked at very closely, so that people can understand it as well as read it.

I have a lot more information I could cover, but I just wanted to mention the way people were voting. Overall, the people with disabilities have that thought about their voting experience. There are a need for improvements as the poll worker to increase the training, include their training. That's all bits and pieces that can be tested out later, but overall, Ohio has made progress. Thank you.

Diane Citrinio: Thank you, Ms. Patterson. Along with everyone on this call, I do want to remind you that if you like, you may submit a written statement by mail to the US Commission on Civil Rights at 55 West Monroe Street, Suite 410, Chicago, Illinois, 60603, or by email to mwojanaroski@usccr.gov. The phone number, if you didn't catch that, is 312-353-8311, where you can get information on how to do that. I'd now like to return to Mark Strasser or David Tryon to see if you have a question. Mark?

Mark Strasser: Yes. I wanted to ask Dean Tokaji, you had mentioned that if there was an imposition of a sphere of burden on voting, that'd be enough to trigger a strict scrutiny. I was trying to figure what would [inaudible 01:30:07] or trigger the severe burden. Is it the number affected, the degree of dilution or how hard it's voting or what do they do?

Daniel Tokaji: It's really a great question. I can't say that the cases both within the 6th Circuit, where we are here in Ohio or around the country has been entirely clear or consistent on that question. Let me relate to you some of the things that courts have looked at in determining the severity or substantiality on the burden. One thing that they've looked at is how much does it affect an individual voter? You could have a practice, let's say requiring that you have a permanent address on file, that affects a relatively small number of voters, but affects them in a significant way, where homeless people would be quite dramatically affected, effectively unable to vote if that kind of requirement were imposed.

The severity of the burden upon individuals is one thing. Number two is the number of people affected, something that courts have also looked at, is it 1,000 people? Is it 10,000 people? Is it 100,000 people who might be affected? Then a third thing that courts have looked at is whether the effect bears heavily on particular groups of voters? That could be, for example, groups that are defined by race. A practice that has a disparate racial impact might be looked on with greater skepticism or that disproportionately affects less affluent people as did the poll tax struck down back in Harper. That would be another group.

We might also look with special disfavor on voting burdens that have a disparate impact on a partisan basis, for example, practices that disproportionately exclude Republicans or Democrats from voting, especially if those barriers to voting or burdens on voting have been adopted by the other party. Those are not an exclusive list, but some of the things that courts have looked to in trying to measure the severity of the burden.

Diane Citrino: We have just time for ... We're actually out of time, but I want David Tryon to have a chance to ask a question. If whoever answers it could try and be as brief as possible, that'd be great. David.

David Tryon: Thank you Diane. By the way, it is pronounced try-on.

Diane Citrino: [crosstalk 01:32:56].

David Tryon: That's okay. Dean Tokaji, I had a question for you relating to the representation of the plaintiffs in the case of Boustani v. Blackwell that you were involved in. Recently there's been concerns of foreign interference with our elections and others have expressed concerns about non-citizens voting, whether intentionally or unintentionally, and thereby diluting the votes of citizens. At the same time, the judge in the Boustani v. Blackwell case indicated that the different requirements for naturalized and native-born citizens created the unlawful potential for disenfranchising eligible citizens for "not looking quite American." I wonder if you have any recommendations in how we can make sure that all eligible citizens can vote and at the same time protect the value of citizens' votes from dilution caused by non-eligible votes, for example, by non-citizens who vote either intentionally or unintentionally?

Daniel Tokaji: It's a great and a very important question. It's funny. As it happens, I'm going to be participating in a conference that's going on at McGeorge Law School in Sacramento today. I'll be participating by video, which is on the very subject of foreign interference with our elections. It is a major concern, one that in some respects goes well beyond the scope of our discussion today, but I do think that there is a significant risk of foreign nationals and, in particular, agents of foreign powers, one in particular, attempting to and a risk of possibly their succeeding in interfering with our elections. I think that is a really important issue. Distinct from the question that you're really focused on of non-citizen voting, how can we make sure that only citizens are voting in the elections?

The Boustani case, in which I should again say I was co-counsel and the views expressed are my own, was challenging a peculiar rule that the Ohio legislature adopted by statute many years ago ... I believe it was around 2005 ... Where non-citizens if challenged at the polls were ... I'm sorry, I should restate that. Naturalized citizens, people who claim to be naturalized citizens, if challenged at the polls were actually required to provide their certificate of naturalization in the event of a challenge. This isn't the kind of document that most people who are naturalized citizens walk around with.

The Supreme Court has long looked with disfavor on rules that treat naturalized citizens less favorably than people who were born in the United States as US citizens. The court in the Boustani case said that discrimination against naturalized citizens as compared with native born US citizens was impermissible. That said, I don't really think that there's a lot of evidence to support the conclusion that we have a massive problem of non-citizens voting in our elections given the considerable risks that any non-citizen, especially one who's here illegally, would take by exposing himself or herself in that way. It's not to say that it's never happened, but actual non-citizen voting based on the evidence that we have available to us doesn't appear to be a huge problem.

One of the difficulties, however, is that we don't really have a national system, for better or for worse, for determining with precision who is and is not a citizen, which makes it very difficult either to verify that someone is or to verify with any degree of certainty that they are not a citizen, unless they're somebody who's actually in the process within the immigration and naturalization system. I throw that out as an issue, but again, I think there's a danger of overstating the magnitude of the problem in an era where we've seen at least in some quarters a return of a rather alarming nativist sentiment.

David Tryon: But I understand you discounting that, but you haven't answered my question. Is there a way to solve that concern by some people while still preserving the rights of everyone to vote?

Daniel Tokaji: I think I have answered it. I said it's a difficult problem.

Diane Citrino: [crosstalk 01:38:01]. I'm going to have to interrupt. I'm sorry to interrupt, but we are out of time. I would really love to have written supplements, especially since you're presenting on this topic or discussing this topic, Dean, later today. If you would be ... Anyone who would like is welcome to submit written comments and the members of this panel can also submit written questions to the panelists because the record is going to remain open through April 9th, 2018. Please send those to email on the screen, mwojnaroski@usccr.gov or mail to the committee at 55 West Monroe Street, Suite 410, Chicago, Illinois, 60603.
I want to remind everyone there is another panel meeting on Friday, March 9th, from 12:00 to 1:30 pm Eastern Standard Time. We will follow up with everyone in attendance to give minutes and the transcript from this meeting and a link to access those records. We will also notify everyone when the committee is meeting for discussion and when the report that results from this hearing is ready. I want to thank wholeheartedly everyone, the public, the members of this committee and most especially the panelists for your outstanding presentations and your participation today. It is so necessary and so appreciated. Thank you very much. Let’s say that ends this. This meeting is now adjourned. Thank you.

Daniel Tokaji: Thank you Diane.

Speaker 12: Thank you.

Operator: Thank you, ma'am. It does conclude today's call. Thank you for your participation.

Voting Rights in Ohio

• National Context
• Vote Denial in Ohio
• Vote Dilution in Ohio
“[T]he political franchise of voting... is regarded as a fundamental political right, because [it is] preservative of all rights....”

- Yick Wo v. Hopkins (1886)
Voting Rights History

1776 – Only white men with property could vote
1868, 1870 – 14th and 15th Amdts
1870s-1900 – Southern states disenfranchise blacks
1920 – 19th Amdt gives women right to vote
1957, 60 & 64 – Weak voting rights laws enacted
1964 – Just 29% of blacks in the South registered 1964 – 24th Amdt prohibits poll taxes in fed elections
1965 – Voting Rights Act eliminated literacy tests and other barriers to voting, required preclearance of voting changes.
Vote Denial & Vote Dilution

• Vote Denial – Impediments to voting or counting of votes.
  (e.g., poll taxes, literacy tests, voter ID)

• Vote Dilution – Practices that weaken the strength of a political group
  (e.g., at-large elections, gerrymandering)

- Struck down $1.50 poll tax under Equal Protection Clause, citing “fundamental” character of the right to vote.
- Wealth isn’t germane to ability to participate in democracy
Election Litigation: 1996-2014

Pre-2000 Average: 94/yr Post-2000 Average: 246/yr

“Having once granted the right to vote on equal terms, the State may not, by later arbitrary and disparate treatment, value one person’s vote over that of another”
• Voting Technology, §§ 101-06, 301
• Statewide Registration Lists, § 303(a)
• Voter Identification, § 303(b)
• Provisional Voting, § 302

Upheld Indiana’s law requiring most voters to present photo ID against a facial challenge under the Equal Protection Clause.
The Equal Protection Standard

Anderson-Burdick-Crawford

- Determine the “character and magnitude” of the burden on voting.
- If there’s a “severe” burden, then strict scrutiny applies.
- If burden isn’t severe, then the state’s important regulatory interests may justify.
Race Discrimination

- Race discrimination claims under Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments require intent.
- Section 2 of the VRA (as amended in 1982) requires only a discriminatory result.
Section 2 of the VRA

(a) No voting qualification or prerequisite to voting or standard, practice, or procedure shall be imposed or applied by any State or political subdivision in a manner which results in a denial or abridgement of the right of any citizen of the United States to vote on account of race or color… , as provided in subsection (b) of this section.
(b) A violation of subsection (a) of this section is established if, based on the totality of circumstances, it is shown that the political processes leading to nomination or election in the State or political subdivision are not equally open to participation by members of a class of citizens protected by subsection (a) of this section in that its members have less opportunity than other members of the electorate to participate in the political process and to elect representatives of their choice.
Vote Denial
Recent Cases on Voting Burdens

- North Carolina: 4th Circuit enjoined law imposing ID, limiting the means of voting, finding that it was intended to discriminate based on race. NAACP v. McCrory

- Wisconsin: 7th Circuit upheld WI voter ID law, as well as an order making it easier to get ID. Frank v. Walker

- Texas: 5th Circuit invalidated TX voter ID law as racially discriminatory in violation of Voting Rights Act. Veasey v. Abbott
Vote Dilution
Racial Gerrymandering Cases

• AL Leg. Black Caucus v. AL (2015) allowed EPC claim to proceed, rejecting argument that population equality was predominant factor

• Bethune-Hill v. VA BOE (2017) allowed EPC to proceed, holding that districts need not have bizarre shape for race to be predominant factor.

• Cooper v. Harris (2017) struck down two congressional districts under EPC, holding race was predominant factor and VRA didn’t justify.

- 2014: OH legislature enacted restrictions on the counting of some provisional ballots.
- 2016: USDC invalidated some of the restrictions, but the 6th Cir. reversed. NEOCH
Ohio: Early & Absentee Voting

• 2011: Ohio legislature eliminated in-person early voting Fri-Mon before Election Day.

• 2012: 6th Cir. invalidated differential treatment of voters using in-person early voting during the three days before Election Day. Obama for America v. Husted.

• 2014: Ohio legislature voted to eliminate same-day registration and early voting 35-30 days before Election Day (“Golden Week”), and placed other restrictions on counting of absentee ballots.

• 2014: 6th Cir. enjoined restrictions on same day registration and early voting but SCOTUS stayed. NAACP v. Husted

• 2016: USDC enjoined restrictions on early voting but 6th Cir. mostly reversed. NEOCH, ODP v. Husted.

Elections in Ohio

Ohio is doing several things well when it comes to voting access:

• Ohio has bucked the national trend of strict voter ID. Ohioans can use a number of different forms of voter identification including state identification and utility bills.

• Ohio has 29 day “no-fault absentee voting” which is often called Early In-Person voting. Approximately one-third of Ohio voters take advantage on this Early Vote period.

• Ohioans can now register to vote and update their voter registration online.

• Ohioans who are not incarcerated are permitted to vote.
Election Administration

Ohio is doing several things well when it comes to election administration:

• Ohio has truly bipartisan election administration. Like Noah’s Arc, Democrats and Republicans go two by two which leads to more accountability.

• Touch screen voting apparatus have voter verified paper audit trails enabling voters to confirm votes and help with audit procedures.

• Voters are now able to track receipt of their absentee ballots which has helped improve voter confidence.
Purging Ohio’s Voter Rolls
Use it or lose it

• Ohio is one of the most aggressive states for purging voters from the voter rolls for failing to vote. Ohio Secretary of State Jon Husted has established a practice of mailing a postcard to voters who do not vote within a two year period, asking them to confirm their registration. Voters who fail to respond or vote within the following four years are removed from the rolls without further notice.

• In advance of the 2016 election, tens of thousands of voters (primarily African Americans from urban areas) were removed from the rolls, despite still being eligible to vote.
Does aggressive purging violate the National Voter Registration Act of 1993 and the Help America Vote Act of 2002? It’s now in the hands of the US Supreme Court.
In Ohio, all counties are often treated equally rather than all voters.

- All counties are permitted to only have one location for Early In-person voting with limited hours. This leads to long lines at urban Boards of Elections especially on the weekend before presidential elections.

- Several urban counties had traditionally sent absentee ballot applications to voters every year as a cost-effective way to encourage Early Voting. In 2014, the state legislature passed Senate Bill 205. Under this new law, absentee ballot applications can only be mailed by the Secretary of State if the legislature appropriates the money to do so.
Other challenges that Ohio is facing

• Ohio’s voting equipment is aging. Most of the apparatus was purchased following the passage of the Help America Vote Act. Old voting equipment increases the likelihood of failures and crashes. This can lead to long lines and lost votes on Election Day. Older voting machines may also be less secure. Ohio Secretary of State Jon Husted would like $118 million to replace voting apparatus but there is not funding for new machines in the capital budget.

• Frequent changes to voting rules can be confusing and there were no funds set aside for voter education in the state operating budget.

• Electronic poll books can make Election Day much easier but confusion about how to use them led to long lines in Montgomery County in 2016.

• The state legislature is considering reducing the number of poll workers (Senate Bill 21).
Some simple changes could make a difference

• Voters using touch screen voting apparatus should be clearly informed that they can confirm their votes on the voter verified paper audit trail as part of the review by the poll workers.

• Infrequent voters should receive election information including changes in polling locations. Many voters only vote during presidential elections and are deemed inactive so that they don’t receive election updates. In 2016, 13% of registered voters were deemed inactive. This means that one million voters didn’t receive absentee ballot.

• We need better education so that Ohioans know that can vote even if they have a felony on their record. Misinformation about felon disenfranchisement is a real barrier especially for people of color.
We’ve come a long way since the long lines of Election 2004 but we need to find ways to truly invite voters to the polls.

Operator: Thank you for standing by. Good day and welcome to the US commission on civil rights, Ohio advisory committee conference. Today's conference is being recorded, and at this time, I'd like to turn this call over to Diane Citrino, please, go ahead ma'am.

Diane Citrino: Thank you. This meeting of the Ohio advisory committee to the US commission on civil rights shall come to order. For the benefit of those listening, I'm going to introduce myself, and my colleagues on the call. I'm Diane Citrino, an attorney working in Cleveland, Ohio, and the chair of the Ohio advisory committee.

Members of the committee on this call are Cassandra Bloodstone, David Forte, Scott Garber, Mark Strasser, Edith Thrower, and David Tyron. Also, present on this call are David Moussatt, chief of the regional program unit for the US commission on civil rights, and Melissa Wojnaroski, a civil rights analyst.

The US commission on civil rights is an independent, bi partisan agency of the federal government, charged with studying discrimination or denial of equal protection of the laws, or the administration of justice, because of race, color, religion, sex, age, disability, or national origin. In each of the 50 states and the District of Columbia, an advisory committee to this mission has been established, and these commissions are made up of responsible people who serve without compensation, to advise the commission on relevant information concerning their respective states.

Today, our purpose is to hear testimony regarding voting rights in Ohio. If the speakers begin to veer away from the civil rights questions at hand, to discuss possibly important but unrelated topics, I will interrupt them, and ask them to refrain from doing that. I want to remind everyone this meeting is being recorded, and will be transcribed for the public record. Today's meeting is part two, of a two part series, the committee is going to hear on this topic.

We heard testimony last Friday, from a distinguished panel, and we are very excited to welcome today's speaker, Edward Leonard, director of the Franklin County Board of Elections, and Representative Kathleen Clyde, of the Ohio Senate to speak, but unfortunately he was unable to make it today. We also reached out repeatedly to the Ohio Secretary of State's office, but hey declined to participate in this hearing. We are fortunate, and thankful to have the people we have, they are exceptional panelists, and we're very excited to hear what they have to say.

I'd also like to present the ground rules for today's meeting. This is a public meeting, open to the media, and the general public. We have a strict timeframe for making these presentations, we expect the panelists to speak about 15 minutes each, after both the panelists have concluded their statements, the committee members will ask questions and answers. To accommodate people who are not on the agenda, but wish to make a statement, or as ka question, we've scheduled one open session today, and that will after the questions from the committee are answered.

We expect this open session, and question and answers for the public, to be no later than 1:15. So, if the committee members are still asking questions, we will stop at 1:15 to allow the public to participate. The way they will do that is when the operator will get on the phone, and anyone wishing to make a statement should press *1 on their phone, to request that their line be unmuted. In addition, people can submit written statements by mail to the US commission on civil rights, located at 55 West Monroe Street, Suite 410, Chicago, Illinois 60603. Or by email to Melissa [inaudible 00:04:27] and her email is going to be on the screen but, I'm gonna spell it for you right now. It's MWOJNAROSKI@USCCR.gov. You also can call 312-353-8311 for more information.

Although some of the statements made today may be controversial. We want to ensure all invited guests [inaudible 00:04:56] defame, or degrade any person, or organization. Again, as the chair I reserve the right and privilege to cut short any statements that defame, degrade, or don't pertain to the issue at hand. We have some very knowledgeable people here, with a wide variety of experience, and viewpoints. If anyone on this call does feel defamed, or degrade by the statements, they can provide a public response during the open comment period, or alternatively can file written statements for inclusion in the proceedings.

We really appreciate the willingness of all participants to share their views and experiences with the committee. Finally, during the question and answer portion, the committee members may ask questions of both panelists, or of one panel member individually, after the prepared statements by both of them have been concluded. You must be recognized by the chair before asking any question of the participants, and in addition, because of the large number of members, and short amount of time, each committee member will be limited to one question plus a follow up.

So, at this time I am going to turn the meeting over to our first panelist, Edward Leonard, the director of the Franklin County Board of Elections. Thank you so much for joining us. Please proceed Mr. Leonard.

Ed Leonard: Alright, well good afternoon. I'd like to thank the committee for the opportunity to share some insights into the voting process here in Franklin County. As you mentioned, my name is Ed Leonard, I'm director of the Franklin County Board of Elections, and I've been in this role since September of 2016, but prior to becoming director, I've been in a number of positions in Franklin County government, both administrative and elected. Including, I served as deputy

To tell you a little bit about Franklin County, in addition to being the home of the state capital, and the Ohio State University, it has a population of a 1,264,000. We have 853,000 registered voters. Has a median income about 56,000, 16% of our population live below the poverty line, and 90 % of our residents have a high school degree or higher, and 39% have a Bachelor’s degree or higher. All those statistics come from the Census Bureau from the 19, or 2016 update.

But, it’s my understanding from the invitation to speak today that the committee was seeking an updated testimony, to identify the extent to which concerns raised in 2006, have been addressed, and any new concerns that may be present. In preparation of this discussion, I reviewed the testimony given by Franklin County’s then director, Matt [inaudible 00:08:07], who's by the way now deputy Secretary of State, for the Secretary of State, Jon Husted.

And in that testimony, he had reviewed the following areas, and they included voting machine shortages, long lines on election day, some of the protections that were in place to prevent over voting, some of our poll worker training efforts, and so I’m going to address those issues as well as a few others. As the then Director [inaudible 00:08:36] mentioned in 2006, the Board of Elections was in the process of implementing a new voting machine system for placement, that would greatly expand the number of voting machines available for placement at the various voting locations in Franklin County. By the general election of 2006, Franklin County had over 4,600 voting machines, versus the 2,800 machines that were in the field on the election day in 2004.

Today Franklin County has 4,735 [inaudible 00:09:11], touch screen voting machines with a voter verifiable paper audit trail. These machines are allocated based on a formula of one machine per every 175 active voters. The increased number of available voting machines ,has clearly had a positive impact on reducing lines at the polling locations, but there are some other factors that have contributed to significantly reducing lines at the polls on election day. the first factor is the change from a precinct based voting, to a location based voting.

Allow me to explain that a little bit. We’ve always had voting locations with multiple precincts in a location. Prior to 2006, a voting location with multiple precincts, would have a separate voting area for each precinct, a separate set of poll workers, a separate set of paper poll books, a separate set of machines, and those constraints, resolving from the limitations of the voting technology at the time, would lead to a voter potentially going to the wrong precinct check in table, and then being told that they were at the wrong precinct, and then having to start that process over again at the correct precinct check in table.

Also, based on that scenario that there could be a line forming at one precinct location, while there’d be no one else in line, and there’d be plenty of machines available at another precinct within that same location. Because of the new technology, Franklin County spearheaded that move to location based, which then allowed a voter to still vote based on their correct precinct, but they would just check in at one table, they could be assigned to any machine in the location, and given their correct ballot style to cast their vote. So, today most counties are voting on that location, rather than precinct based system.

Another factor that helped reduce the lines is the introduction of no fault absentee, or early vote centers. Prior to 2006 absentee was only reserved for individuals for instance who were 65 years of age or older, or had some physical disability, or infirmity, or they had to be absent from the county on election day. Today, any voter can request an absentee ballot, or vote at an early vote center, in that 28 days leading up to election day. Over each successive election cycle, more and more people have utilized that early vote option, either by mail, or in person.

In Franklin County in 2016 Presidential election, nearly 83,500 voters cast their vote at an early vote center, and another 142,000 cast their ballots by mail. So, just shy of 40% of all of our voters who cast a vote in 2016 general election, cast that ballot before election day. That equates to 225,700 voters who didn't show up at the polls, they cast their vote early. So, we continue to heavily advertise early vote options to encourage voters to vote early in an effort to reduce the strain on the voting locations on election day. In the 2016 general election cycle, Franklin County Board of Elections spent over $245,000 in radio and TV advertising on both mainstream, as well as targeted media outlets.

Finally, the poll book, and poll pads we've added to speed up the process with which we process voters on election day, and in the early vote center. With the swipe of an ID, or a few keystrokes of a person's last name, the electronic poll book can quickly pull up that person's information, allow them to sign the poll pad, and then quickly be assigned to a voting machine. So, there's no more long lines behind paper poll books for one segment of the alphabet, while there's no line for the other segment. So, in our vernacular we say, it's any line, any time. So, this is how we've processed voters on election day, that does speed up that process, because you don't just have voters waiting in a line for the poll book any longer.

The concerns that were expressed in 2006, on preventing over voting. The concern regarding over voting, is an issue that we're certainly mindful of, but we don't see it as a huge problem in Franklin County. The current [inaudible 00:14:07] touch screen technology that we have in Franklin County, for both election day voting, and the early vote center, doesn't allow a voter to over vote in a race. The contests are programmed in the software for the number of choices that are permitted in that contest. So, if it's a vote for one, or vote for two, or vote for three, whatever the case may be.

If the voter attempts to vote for more than the allowable number of candidates in a contest the machine is going to alert them that they're attempting to vote for more candidates than that are permitted, and that they have to deselect a candidate before they can select another candidate. An absentee over voting is still a possibility because voters are voting on a paper ballot, and in the presidential election of 2016, only 228 over votes among the 165,000 paper ballots that were cast in that election were actually over votes. So, it’s a relatively small number.

As Franklin County looks at new voting systems, controls to prevent, or minimize over voting will be a factor, that we’re going to consider in evaluating each system. Typically touch screen systems don’t allow voters to select more candidates than the contest allow, and the precinct level scanners that we’ve seen among the new optical scans systems warn a voter of an over vote situation, and then allow that voter to correct that potential over vote.

The other issue that was addressed in 2006 that we’ll speak about is poll worker training. We recognize that our poll workers are often times the only representative of the Board of Elections that a voter will ever see. So, it is critically important that we train those poll workers to provide the best, and most accurate service to the voter. By statute poll workers must receive training once every three years, and voting location managers must receive training before every federal primary election. In Franklin County we go well above that standard. We have poll workers trained before every election.

Franklin County created a system of specialization of roles in the polling locations, and I know that we’re not alone in that practice, but by having certain positions perform certain functions, such as a roster judge, paper judge, or a machine judge, or voting location manager, we can refine the training to cover those subjects, and those tasks that are pertinent to that role, rather than opening up a fire hose of information at every task, for ever position, for ever poll worker. So, that specialization allows us to refine our training.

The training manual that we’ve produced has actually won awards for it’s design. We’ve worked with design professionals to assist us in it’s creation. It gets updated every election, and we have a separate manual for a primary, and a separate manual for general. It’s tabbed for it’s specific role, so it makes it easier for that poll worker to find the information that replies just to their responsibilities. When actually Department of Justice representatives visited Franklin County before the 2016 general election, they were very impressed with our training materials, and we regularly get requests from mother counties about our manual.

One of the programs we’re particularly proud of is the practice makes perfect where poll workers come in on the last weekend before the election to brush up on various election related skills. So, we have various stations throughout the office, that address provisional balloting requirements, setting up voting locations, setting up the poll pads, opening and closing the polls, just to give those poll workers that opportunity to brush up on their skills. We’re beginning to incorporate video to evaluate our poll worker trainers, and to create short web videos, that will serve as a refresher resource to review if they can’t make it to a practice makes perfect, it will allow those poll workers to brush up on their skills when they fell they need to.
One area that wasn't addressed in much detail in 06, was the steps being taken to accommodate disabled voters. The IT staff at the Board of Elections created a software tool that allows us to document the ADA compliance of all of our voting locations, and this tool allows us to document, including photographs, any equipment that the Board of Election will need to bring to the site on election day to make an otherwise non compliant location, become an ADA compliant location, including where that equipment's gonna need to be placed by our poll workers, so that they can make sure they put the equipment in the right place to make the location compliant. We've actually won a national award for that software from the election center. Also the state of Iowa asked to borrow that software, and they won an award from the national association of Secretary of States for the software that they borrowed from us.

The current [inaudible 00:19:22] machines actually do provide greater accessibility for those with disabilities to vote, including an audio ballot for the visually impaired. We've gone through the voting machine process, or as we go through that process for new voting machines, we have been proactively including disability advocacy groups to ensure that we solicit feedback on the new voting systems, and how they may affect those with disabilities. Just before I arrived at the Board of Elections, or just as I was arriving, we made adjustments to the early vote center, to improve the accessibility of the building for those with disabilities. The most notable of those were to install motorized door openers, and made sure that those were installed in a way that made it most accessible to those with disabilities.

For a number of years now the Board of Elections has worked with Democracy Live to facilitate greater access for those with disabilities, including an online sample ballot that is easier to access, and is ADA screened reader friendly. The next phase with Democracy Live will be the implementation of a remote ballot marking system, whereby a disabled voter will be able to receive and mark their ballot on their computer screen.

Finally, we are currently undergoing a redesign of our entire board of Elections website, and working with the [inaudible 00:20:49] Center to that end. It will be a website that is more disability friendly, more info on the homepage, fewer drop down boxes, less drilling down to find the information that you need.

Finally, we wanted to discuss a few things that the board has done to improve the voters experience. In the past years we saw a high number of provisional ballots being ruled invalid, and the Franklin County Board of Elections developed a ballot ... For the provisional ballot envelope, we developed a template that rests atop that provisional ballot envelope to indicate to the voter, which items must be completed to ensure the ballot will be counted. This template's reduced a number of errors, and the number of ballots being ruled invalid because a certain item was left incomplete on a provisional ballot envelope. As with the training manual, we had a lot of Ohio Counties who've asked for that template, so that they can implement it in their counties with that same goal in mind.
New Board offices have aided voters to access our services and make use of the early vote center, because we're now located in a more suburban part of Columbus, as opposed to being downtown. Being downtown was an impediment, sometimes a deterrent to some voters, who didn't want to deal with downtown traffic, or all the one way streets in downtown Columbus. This new location on a major east/west thoroughfare. The BOE is on a bus line, there's plenty of parking, easy access, and a larger space to accommodate the vote center. We have an ever growing Somali population in Franklin County. It's second only to Minneapolis, St. Paul. The Board has a Somali employee that works for us on a seasonal basis, during the early vote season, and is able to assist Somali voters in getting set up on the machines, and so forth.

Finally, I'd like to mention the online voter registration allows voters who have a drivers license to register online, and allows a voter who's already registered to update their registration online. It still doesn't surpass the old fashioned pen and paper in terms of number of registrations, but it is increasing significantly. So, a great deal's happened since the last time this committee discussed these issues in 2006. A great many strides have been made to improve voter experience, and improve voter confidence in the election process.

I know my fellow election officials throughout the state take great pride in executing their responsibilities of conducting fair and accurate elections, and will continue to do so. Is there a need for more resources, absolutely. But, we will continue to work with our partners at the state, local, and federal level to ensure that our elections are accurate and secure. I want to thank this committee for their interest in the matter, and allowing me the opportunity to share these insights today.

Diane Citrino: Great. Thank you so much Mr. Leonard. We really appreciate that, and we're glad you're able to stay and answer questions after we hear from our next speaker, Representative Kathleen Clyde, of the Ohio House of Representatives. Representative Clyde please go ahead.

Kathleen Clyde: Thanks Diane, and thank you for inviting me to be her today. I'm very honored to get to share some of my thoughts and experiences. As was stated, I am in my fourth term in the Ohio House of Representatives. I represent District 75, and northeast Ohio. I am the ranking minority member on the government accountability and oversight committee, which is where election related legislation comes through the legislature. I, full disclosure am a 2018 candidate for Ohio Secretary of State. I've just a quick road map of what I will talk about today. I would like to review some issues from 2006. I'd like to give an update on law and practice changes since 2006, improvements, and also still some problem areas. Then an update on election issues that have come up during various cycles, and issues that continue to be problems, or areas to monitor going forward.

So getting right to it, reviewing 2006 issues. Of course, we had the problem of in 2004 we had Secretary of State Ken Blackwell issue a decision that voter registrations that were on not the correct form of card stock would not be accepted for voter registration purposes. That was a very controversial decision that received national attention. We had mass voter challenges in the 2004 presidential election. We had a problem with not enough voting machines being deployed, and we had very long lines in 2004. The last voter in the country was actually a college student in Ohio who voted at around 4 a.m., the day after election day, after waiting in line for more than nine hours.

We've had big provisional ballot problems in Ohio, in 2004, in 2006, and we've had litigation almost every election cycle about this. A new complex voter ID requirement was enacted in 2005, despite broad opposition to that measure. The new no excuse needed absentee voting was enacted in 2005. Although, the in person early voting didn't start in practice till 2008.

So a quick update on law and practice changes since 2006. Again, we've had many problems in our election system. We've had since 2006, the no excuse needed absentee voting, although there have been many attempts to cut, or limit absentee no fault voting in Ohio, we have had many lawsuits trying to keep days and hours available for Ohio voters, specifically around the last three days of early voting, and whether those would available to voters. The good news is that we were successful, and those days continue to be available. We had a bill that came through the legislature and passed on a part line vote, that cut off the first week of early voting, and we've had trouble maintaining evening, and weekend hours for early voting. That has been won through litigation, although that continues to be something that well need to monitor.

When it comes to our ID law in Ohio, I think that there is an improved comfort level with the law. I think voters, and poll workers, are familiar now with its different provisions in the last 12 years that it's been in place, but we still are experiencing challenges. There's challenges for student voters and meeting the requirement. In Ohio, it's actually okay to use your concealed carry license for ID, but not your student ID card. Homeless Ohioans can vote provisionally without ID, and have their vote counted, but hat is only because of a victory in court.

We have had provisional ballot issues, some setbacks. We've had legislation passed on party line votes, making it harder to cunt some provisional ballots. But we've also had victories in court that have helped us to count groups of those ballots, but really there's been little meaningful change in the numbers cast, and the numbers thrown out. We are one of the top states in the country for the number of provisional ballots we have, and unfortunately the number that get thrown out.

We've had issues with absentee ballots. Again we've had some setbacks. We've had legislation passed on party line votes that have made it harder to count absentee ballots, but we've had some victories in court limiting some of those problems, although there's been little meaningful change in the numbers cast and thrown out. We've had 38 voting restriction bills introduced in the legislature since 2011, and 13 of those bills have passed, and then signed into law.

Turning now to the 2012 election. In that election we saw intimidating billboards, targeting African American neighborhoods, and near voting locations. We saw State House Democrats actually get more votes than the State House Republicans, but they only won 40% of the seats. We had a State House race that was decided by only four votes, and unfortunately the Republicans in the legislature refused to count votes in that contest, and that contest gave the Republicans a veto proof super majority.

We saw votes get thrown out in that situation because of a Board of Elections data entry error, and the voters social security, it didn't match what the voter provided on their provisional ballot envelope, so it was thrown out, even though the voter provided the right information. We had a young marine who was in training, and voted with an absentee ballot, but didn't send back both ballot envelopes, so his ballot was not counted. We had a man who wrote his birth year on his birthdate, and was off by one digit, his vote was not counted. And there are many, many, many more examples of votes thrown out in that election.

In 2016, more recently we had voter intimidation at the polls. An example from Summit County, we had reports of men riding around in pickup trucks, at the polls threatening people. We unfortunately still are only allowed to have one early voting site in each Ohio County, that is able, that is what passed through legislation. Because of that, we have early lines at our early vote locations, especially as you get up close to election day. Again, we have counties that have 15,000 people, and counties in Ohio that have over a million people, but each county is only allowed to have one early vote location.

We had vote by mail applications mailed to Ohio voters. It was made public that it would be to every registered Ohio voter to try to encourage vote by mail in the 2016 election, but actually one million registered eligible voters were excluded from that mailing because they were deemed inactive, and were being set up for Ohio's unlawful purging process, which disproportionately affects black voters. Our turn out in 2016 was our lowest voter turn out as a state since the year 2000. We had 64% of Ohioans turning out to vote in a major, presidential election.

Some other current issues. We have a case out of Ohio pending before the United States Supreme Court. We have, unfortunately the state of Ohio has purged over two million voters from the voter roll since 2011, simply for not voting in a few elections. That process was challenged by voter advocates, and actually a voter who is from my house district, a veteran Larry Harmon. That case, we won at the six circuit level, and that purging was deemed unlawful. Our Secretary of State appealed to the United States Supreme Court, and we are awaiting a decision with about 2 million Ohio voters hanging in the balance.
We also have a new, online voter registration system, which began after the last presidential election. It's new as of 2017. Unfortunately, it does exclude Ohioans who do not have a driver's license, or a state photo ID card. So, that unfortunately, some groups of Ohioans are not as able to participate in online voter registration. Homeless Ohioans, those in poverty who do not drive, or have an ID card, and it impacts the young, the elderly, and disabled Ohioans without photo ID.

Issues that continue to be a problem or issues to monitor as we go forward. Early voting is just a very controversial method of voting in Ohio, and is under constant attack. For example, we have had voters have to wait in long lines. We have had hours, and days be cut, and we see efforts to make it harder for the in person early voting process, which is favored by African American voters in Ohio. We continue to see people disappearing from the voter rolls. Other states have moved to automatic voter registration, which has really improved the situation for increasing the number of registered voters, but Ohio [inaudible 00:37:42] of voter registration innovation has yet to take that reform seriously.

We continue to have a large number of provisional ballots being thrown out in each election. We need new voting machines in Ohio. Many counties have machines that are a decade old, or older. Unfortunately counties have been cut pretty significantly in their funding from the state, so county coffers are low. The state has not yet passed funding for new machines, and one proposal currently being considered bases the machine allocation amounts on registered voters, but purging has depleted registration numbers and could unfairly impact funding.

We've also seen government Russian government attacks on our voting system. This is certainly a civil rights issue for all Americans. Ohio was targeted in the 2016 election, and there are reports that the Kremlin, and possibly other attackers will be attacking our election system again. Ohio is still very much roiled by voter rights attacks, and controversy. The voting wars are likely to continue in the legislature, and the courtrooms.

I hope I've provided a helpful picture of where we are after some important reforms, and elections, and where we still need to go as a state, to ensure that our elections in Ohio are fair, accessible to everyone who wants to vote, and that everyone's vote is counted. So, I'll leave it at that and again, I thank you all so much for listening, and for inviting me to be here with you today.

Diane Citrino: Thank you Kathleen Clyde, Representative Clyde, we really appreciate that testimony, and with that we are going to open this up to our committee members, each of the committee members on this call are going to get one question, plus a follow up if necessary. So, I would like to ask our committee members to let me know if you have a question for either Edward Leonard, the director of the Franklin County Board of Elections, or Representative Kathleen Clyde of the Ohio House of Representatives. I will remind the public that they Speaker 5: Diane, it's Subodh, I just wanted the record to reflect I was able to join the call about halfway through Representative Clyde's testimony.

Diane Citrino: Welcome Subodh, thank you for joining us.

Scott: Hi Diane. This is Scott. I have a question if I may?

Scott: This is for either or both panels, director Leonard, and Representative Clyde well thank you both for testifying. I'm troubled that the Secretary of State's office did not participate in this meeting despite the diligent efforts of our staff to secure that participation. Do you have any thoughts about why that is, or whether it matters that they did not?

Kathleen Clyde: This is Representative Clyde. I am troubled by that, and have been concerned with many of the actions of our Secretary of State, and I think not being willing to participate in this important dialogue is very concerning. Again, our elections should not be a partisan issue, it should be something that we all work together to figure out how we can make our elections as accessible, fair, and open as possible, and this shows that this is a problem that is persisting in Ohio that there's hyper partisanship with our elections, and it's unfortunate that our Secretary of State couldn't join us today.

Ed Leonard: I would agree that is, I'm disappointed that they're not participating in today's presentation, particularly given the fact that the Deputy Secretary of State [inaudible 00:43:16], actually had been an election official here in Franklin County, and is quite familiar with the sort of issues, and I think could add to that conversation.

Kathleen Clyde: Thank you, another question from our committee members?

Mark: Diane this is Mark. I have one if there is time.

Kathleen Clyde: Mark, can you speak up please?

Mark: Shall I ask the question, actually this is for both.

Kathleen Clyde: Yes. Please go ahead.

Mark: Thanks. I'm interested in the process where the voters are purged from records. So, I'm assuming without knowing that they don't know. Then if someone shows, or they're given a provisional ballot, or basically what happens?
Kathleen Clyde: So, can I give my read on this, and please fill in-

Ed Leonard: Sure.

Kathleen Clyde: What I may leave out. So, the process is directed from the Secretary of State's office, that Boards of Elections engage in this process. There are a couple of different processes for purging. Of course deceased voters, there is a lot addresses purging people who died, or purging people who've moved out of state. That's not what we're contesting here. That's not what's part of the litigation. The litigation, and the voters impacted, are ones who have missed a few Ohio elections.

So, the process in Ohio is, if a voter misses a federal election, an even year election, they receive a postcard from their Board of Elections. It's a confirmation notice to confirm if they have moved, or if they still are a registered voter living in that location. If they do not respond to that postcard, or show up to vote, or take some action in the voting process in the next two election cycles, so the next two even years, then they are purged from the rolls, with no further notice.

Some of these voters, actually thousands of these voters, show up to vote after they have been purged. The proper procedure, and this is what usually happens from my knowledge, is they are given a provisional ballot, because they are not in the poll book. That's what we do with voters who present themselves and there's a problem with their voter registration. If that voter was indeed a voter purged for this reason, their provisional ballot is thrown out, and that's also part of our problem with provisional ballots.

Diane Citrino: Mr. Leonard, do you have anything to add?

Ed Leonard: No, I think she's largely accurate on all the points that she made. We do, obviously we keep our voter rolls clean in regard to those who are deceased, and those who obviously moved to another county. Sometimes people get this impression that voter rolls are loaded, and that's an issue, and we do get reports on a regular basis of those who have died. We get that report through the Secretary of State's office, from the Bureau of vital statistics. We get notified of what are identified as duplicate voters, but in terms of the purged voters, again, it is somebody who is identified after two federal election cycles, that haven't responded to that letter that they should have received, or haven't voted in that election. We don't see a large number. We have had a number of people in that category in Franklin County. But I wouldn't identify it as a large number. Again, we don't want any voter to be denied the opportunity to vote in any election.

Diane Citrino: Thank you.

Mark: Just as a follow up, and then they have to register to vote again in order to vote in a future election, is that how it works?
Ed Leonard: If they cast a provisional ballot, that application will be considered a voter registration form.

Mark: Oh, I see, so for the next time it might get counted, but for this time it would be thrown out?

Ed Leonard: I'd have to double check as to whether it would be thrown out. I'm not sure of that. Again, the Secretary of State sets forth the criteria we can use to invalidate that.

Kathleen Clyde: Let me just jump in, and say that, the ballot does get thrown out for that election, but the envelope that the ballot is in, is the provisional ballot envelope that serves as their voter registration, as long as they completed it correctly. They should be all good to go for the next election, but unfortunately, they are disenfranchised in the current election. Now, neighboring Indiana counts those provisional ballots of people that have been purged, but here in Ohio they are thrown out.

Mark: Thank you.

Edith: This is Edith [inaudible 00:49:26], and I have a question, or comment.

Diane Citrino: Go ahead, Edith. This is Diane, go ahead and ask your question, do you want to direct it to both panelists?

Edith: It could certainly be directed to both, and it's kind of a question, or comment. Thank you both for being here today, and your presentations were very informative. I think it's perfectly legitimate that if someone passes away to purge them, and I think it's perfectly legitimate to purge the names of someone who's moved out of the voting area. I don't think anyone would argue with that. I was just wondering, if either of you have any sense of why else, would no one vote? I know that from personal experience, and observation that some people, voting is emotional many times. Some people are reactionary in terms of their voting pattern. Reacting to issues or circumstances.

So, I'm just wondering if those are taken into account. There could be for instance, someone running in a presidential election, or a federal election. I think in federal elections people are focused on the president more than anything else, that they don't want to vote for. That person could run for a consecutive time, and they didn't support them the first time, so they're not gonna support them this time. Is that taken into account at all, if you get my drift.

Kathleen Clyde: I get your drift, and I think that just as it's a fundamental right for everyone to vote that's eligible. It's your right not to vote, and to not participate in the election. We should be working hard to get people who have been ... who have strayed away from voting and participating, back into the process of participating in our democracy. Unfortunately, in Ohio we purge people if they don't vote too many times, and I think that's exactly the wrong way to approach this. I think there are a couple of reasons for not voting.

One is the example I talked about where voters did not receive, people who were set up for purging. So, they received this mailing after missing one election, did not receive an absentee ballot application, like other registered voters in Ohio, which is a way to encourage them to participate, and to vote from home, to vote by mail.

I think there's a lot of confusion about the ID requirement. There have been a number of states that have adopted photo ID only for voting. Ohio thankfully, is not one of those states, but I think voters have heard about that, and sometimes there is some confusion. Is that the law in Ohio, I don't have an ID, you know just having that out there can be problematic. Other states disenfranchise ex-felons. Ohio does not, and that is an area where I see confusion from voters.

They don't realize that they have the ability to again register, and participate. I think there is a suppressive affect, with these partisan battles, and attacks on the right to vote, that make people think, this is just too complicated, my vote's not gonna count. It just attaches, I think a negative stigma to the importance of voting, and the right to vote, and that it may be challenged, or taken away. I think people are very discouraged by that, and that affects turn out.

Finally, I would say our voter registration cut off deadline is a huge problem in Ohio. It is 30 days before an election that you need to be registered to vote. That is the longest amount of time allowed under federal law. Many states have shorter cut off periods, or have same day voter registration, or have automatic voter registration, and it correlates directly with turn out. States that have same day registration have 5-10% higher voter turn out than Ohio does. We need to continue to work to make our voter registration system better, and not actually be a burden on voters, and on their ability to turn out.

Diane Citrino: Thank you.

Ed Leonard: To your question though, is [inaudible 00:54:43] is that, I think voters don't typically don't participate in some of the local year elections, no matter how much we encourage them, and they do look at what they see at a national level, and that the presidential is the most important to them. They perceive it's the most important to them, even though their local officials are the ones who have the most direct impact. So, if they're not enthusiastic about the choices they have, or they've been turned off by the negative media coverage, or the negative advertising, and they simply fail to show up to one presidential election, and don't show up to the next one. All of a sudden, they're in that category, so it doesn't really take into account what voters might actually be experiencing in choosing not to participate in a federal election, or presidential election, then putting themselves at risk for being purged.
Edith: Thank you.

Diane Citrino: Great. Thank you. This is Diane Citrino, I'd like to point of privilege, just ask a question, in the last time, we didn't have much time. We heard a little bit about it from Kathleen Clyde about the Russian government attack, and how Ohio was targeted. So, I have a two part question, I'd like to ask what are we doing in Ohio to protect from attacks form a foreign government, and is there more we should do? I would like Mr. Leonard if you could address what are we doing right now, and Representative Clyde if you have ideas of what other things we should be doing, I'd really appreciate hearing those.

Ed Leonard: Well from the voting standpoint, we do keep all the tabulation equipment, and all the computers that program the election are not connected to the internet. So, they're not subject to being hacked, because they're not connected to the internet. We take steps during the tabulation process to ensure that when we transmit results to the Secretary of State's office, that we're not in some way connecting to the internet, and then connecting back to the tabulation equipment. So, we keep those separate.

We do logic and accuracy testing on every machine before it's put out in the field. There aren't ports on the machine that are available form somebody outside to tamper with the machine, without it being obvious that something has happened. All the machines when they are put out at the voting locations are locked, and the locks are sealed with tamper proof seals so that if something has happened, it would know that. Then we have controls any place where live ballots are in the Board of Elections, that it is under double lock and key, those keys are maintained by a key control box with hand print and key code access, so we can track who enters, and accesses that key box.

The voting registration software, we transmit that to the Secretary of State's office, and so form a standpoint of being able to verify if there is something that had happened, we have that capability, but are those systems, those computers would be connected to the internet, and potentially susceptible, but we can maintain a duplicate record in addition to what we send off to the Secretary of State's office.

Our County data center has a cyber security effort to keep our system secure. We have worked with, we continue to work with Department of Homeland Security to assess our systems that we have in place to ensure that we've got adequate protections to prevent cyber attack on our system. So, at that point, I would let Representative Clyde address some of the issues that she might have.

Kathleen Clyde: Sure, thanks Ed. I would say that this is a prime example of what would be good to hear from our Secretary of State, had he joined us today, and what he's doing to prevent from future attacks. We know Ohio was one of the states where it was attempted. We have been told by the Secretary of State that these attacks were not successful. But much needs to be done to protect our elections going into the future.
I think that we should have a dedicated cyber security director in the Secretary of State's office. I'd like to see that director advised by a bipartisan council of security experts, election officials, and voter advocates. Unfortunately our Secretary of State has cut back on staff pretty dramatically in his time in office. I'm not sure if the current staffing levels are adequate, especially when it comes to the security level of our elections, and helping counties make sure they have the resources that they need, and the advice that they need to keep our system secure.

I would like to see Ohio move to a paper ballot system. Right now we have about half our counties have electronic voting machines, where the ballot is an electronic ballot, with a paper trail, and then we have counties with paper ballot systems, and the paper ballot is a voter marked, voter verified, that is the ballot of record in the election. That is a more secure system. That is what other states are moving to, that is what security officials on the national level are saying is the safest system, and it also can be a cheaper system, a little easier to maintain, and there is less overall equipment needed.

I also think an important part of any voting system is doing regular audits to make sure that the tabulating is 100% accurate, and our Boards of Election are doing that, via directive from the Secretary of State. I'd like to see that requirement put into law, and make sure that it is an important part of every election process to verify the results, and to make sure our systems are secure.

David: This is David Forte, May I have a question?

Diane Citrino: David, go ahead.

David Forte: Thank you. Is there any monitoring system to make sure that requests for absentee ballots are timely considered and sent out by the various Boards of Election. Is there any fail safe or checking system to monitor when applications are received, and when they are sent out?

Ed Leonard: Franklin County does. At least we process those applications, and track when we send the ballot out, when it hits the mail stream, and then when it comes back. In terms of the application, cause we can have a situation, and we do, where people say well I sent in my application, but we have no record of it, and so we can track it once we receive it, and then track when that ballot particularly is prepared and put in the mail stream. It still doesn't control for a situation where a voter asserts that they've sent in an application, and we have no record of having received it.

David Forte: I have a follow up question. Is there out of the Secretary of State's office, is there any monitoring of the various Boards of Elections response rate and alacrity, or is it all just self controlled?
Ed Leonard: I have to state, I'm not aware that we're required to report anything to the Secretary of State's office pertaining to how we handle the tracking, and processing of our absentee application requests.

David Forte: So, just to be clear, if the Board of Election is [inaudible 01:04:33] in responding in a timely manner to applications for absentee ballots, no one knows outside of that Board of Election, is that correct?

Ed Leonard: That would be correct.

David Forte: Thank you.

Diane Citrino: Another question from, who is this David Tryon.

David Tryon: David Tryon.

Diane Citrino: David Tryon, go ahead.

David Tryon: Thank you. So, Edward Leonard, the college students, that move out of their parents home and go to college, and then they register to vote in their college town, is there a way that that is monitored, so that they are only voting in one location at the same time to make sure that their vote is not cast out because they are registered in more than one location. How does that all work? I presume that there is a system, but I don't know what it is.

Ed Leonard: Correct. It ends up going to the state wide voter registration database, and we get notified. Obviously, we get the registration, and then the losing county would get notified that this registered voter, is registered in Franklin County, so they're directed, they would remove that person from their voter rolls. In Franklin County, we don't delete them form them, but we put them in a cancel status, so that they're not active voters in Franklin County, because we received notification that they moved to Ohio University, and they're down in Athens now. We would get that notice from the Secretary of State's office that I am a resident of Franklin County, who's moved to Miami of Ohio, or to OU, and they are now residents of those counties. We would put them in a cancel status so that they wouldn't vote here in Franklin County, and vote in the county where they are going to school.

David Tryon: So, there's a centralized record in the Secretary of State's office for all the voters to make sure that they're-

Ed Leonard: Well that's sort of the Boards of Elections, and they do a comparison based on various factors, name, birthdate, last four of the social, and again, when somebody registers they indicate to us what their previous address was so that the Secretary of State could use that as an identifier to indicate that, while this person was previously registered in Athens County, now they're going to Ohio State, so they registered to vote her in Franklin County, from that Athens County would be notified that this individual is now registered in Franklin County, and so they have to be removed from that voter roll, and [inaudible 01:07:34] County would add them to their voter rolls. So, if the person doesn't fill it out completely, there is still a comparison done, based on certain data elements to identify whether that voter is a duplicate voter, and if they are, each county is notified. We get a list of that, so we know that another county is having to drop this person, because they are now registered in Franklin County.

David Tryon: Thank you. Does that work on an interstate level basis too?

Ed Leonard: No. There isn't anything like that on an interstate basis.

David Tryon: Okay. Thank you.

Diane Citrino: So, Cassandra, or Subodh would either of you like to ask a question?

Cassandra: This is Cassandra-

Subodh: I would like to, I'll defer to Cassandra, go ahead.

Diane Citrino: Yes Cassandra, you're recognized, please go ahead.

Cassandra: My question is for Director Leonard, concerning language barriers. Her in [inaudible 01:08:29] County, there have been great discussion, and expert movement, to having the ballots in English, and in Spanish. I saw that one of your slides, that you do work along with the Somali community, so could you give me a little more information just in Franklin County, how many precincts you have your ballots in English, and in Spanish?

Ed Leonard: Right now, we don't have any. I don't know that, that conversation has begun, although I think it should, because I believe there may be some precincts where we've met the federal threshold. I'm not aware of any, where we've been notified that, that is in fact the case, but I think it is something we ought to primarily be growing the Hispanic community in Central Ohio as well as the Somali community in Central Ohio.

Cassandra: Thank you.

Ed Leonard: Okay.

Diane Citrino: Subodh, we're gonna have to interrupt at 1:15 to take calls from the public, so hopefully Subodh, you can ask your question, and get your answer in the next five minutes. Go ahead.

Subodh: Yes, I actually have two questions, I hope we'll be able to cover them both, but they're directed to Representative Clyde. In the interest of full disclosure to the committee and for the record, these relate to a case that I litigated as a private litigator on behalf of the North East Ohio coalition for the homeless, and the Columbus coalition for the homeless. The substance of the case is over now, but Representative Clyde was a witness in that case, so I want to ask he about some of the matters related to that. Forgive me Representative Clyde, if you covered this extensively in your opening testimony, I didn't get to hear all of it, so let me know if you've covered it already.

The first question relates to changes in state law in Ohio that led to the so called five fields requirement on ballot forms, and perfect form. The idea for example that Secretary of State’s have to find that if somebody writes, or the Secretary of State’s representative, and chief of staffs testifying that if somebody writes their name in cursive, even legible cursive, where the form says print name, that the Secretary of State’s position is that, that voter should be disenfranchised.

So, if you could describe the controversy surrounding that requirement, and what led up to it in the general assembly, what your position was on it, and what the current state of the law is on those requirements. The second, which we can elaborate on when you finish on that, and any other issues that came to play in that legislation that you think are problematic, relates to the concern about whether this represents intentional discrimination. I'll be more specific about that when you finish your response to the first question.

Kathleen Clyde: So I covered that very briefly, and I would just say that legislation was past, that was part of the 13 voter restriction bills that have been signed into law since I’ve been in office. Two of those bills required more information to be provided by the voter on their provisional ballot envelope if they’re a provisional voter, or their absentee ballot envelope if they’re an absentee voter. If any of that information is incorrect, or missing, the voter’s ballot shall not be counted.

In the legislature, it's been a few years now, but I remember that there were no proponents of this legislation, only the sponsor of the legislation. They were party line votes, and our concern was that too many votes would be thrown out.
This would increase the problem of us throwing out ballots, and we know who the voter is, what the information generally you know that the voter is eligible, you just are prevented from actually counting that vote. This is an outlier from what other states do. It's really problematic that we are not counting people's votes here in Ohio.

Subodh: And are there different practices among the counties, where in one county they will count your ballots, but in another they won’t?

Kathleen Clyde: Anecdotally, that is what I have heard, that different counties may be applying different standards. There is also a part of the legislation too that said, if the Board voted three to one, or four zero, to count certain groups of ballots that they then would count. But in counties where you had disagreement, the votes wouldn’t count. So, you know this is still a serious problem.
Subodh: And the last question is simply, what experiences have you had, that would cause you, including comments made by legislative colleagues, or others, Board members, that would cause you concern that some of these efforts that would shave off percentages of the vote, and not get them counted, particularly in larger urban counties, might be the product of any effort to intentionally discriminate against minority, poor, or Democratic leaning voters?

Kathleen Clyde: That's been a concern of mine in the legislature frequently with this legislation. We have heard comments about, when it comes to early in person voting, which is absentee voting technically, that certain legislators don't want those people who take the bus after church on Sunday to make it too easy for them. We have heard-

Subodh: Was that a phenomena occurring in the African American community, starting with the election of President Barrack Obama in 2008?

Kathleen Clyde: Yes. That comment, I think it was generally agreed by anyone who heard it, was referring to this whole to the polls that typically happens in Ohio on Sundays after church. That is a big, important part of the get out to vote effort for our African American communities in Ohio.

Subodh: Did Secretary of State you say cut back early voting on Sunday?

Kathleen Clyde: Yes. We have less early voting under our Republican Secretary of State on the evenings, on the weekends, than we had under a Democratic Secretary of State. Less voting opportunity, less, fewer days, fewer hours. These pieces of legislation are, I believe almost everyone, or everyone was decided on a party line vote, so not bi partisan agreement, this is not how we should be making changes to our election system.

You hear legislators in Ohio talk often about voting being a privilege, not a right, and voter's need to be more personally responsible to meet all of these different requirements. It's really sad to see this occurring, and I'm hopeful moving forward as a state that we can come out of this, and be ensuring the right to vote for every single Ohioan that wants to vote, and that we [inaudible 01:17:14] this partisan fighting, and often attacks on certain groups of voters behind us. This belongs on the past.

Subodh: I do want to step, I would-

Diane Citrino: I'm sorry, we're gonna have to interrupt, because we have a scheduled time that's set in the public record for the public to participate. So, we can come back if we have time, but we do need to allow members of the public right now, to press one on their telephone keypad to request that their line being unmuted, and then I'm gonna check and see with the operator to see if there are members of the public who would like to either make a statement, or ask a question of the panelists.
Operator: Thank you ma'am. Edward Leonard, please press star one on your telephone for a question, or comment at this time. Please make sure your mute function is off, to allow us to [inaudible 01:18:15] equipment against star one to signal.

We have no questions at this time from the public.

Diane Citrino: Thank You.

Subodh: May I follow up then Diane, May I follow up on the last discussion, please.

Diane Citrino: Yes, Subodh, go ahead.

Subodh: So, Representative Clyde, just going back to the second larger question about evidence, or things that cause you concern about intentionally discrimination. Were there other comments that you heard, or that were made? And could you also talk about the billboard incident in Cleveland, related to one of the presidential elections.

Kathleen Clyde: Yes, and I did talk about that in my presentation, and had a slide.

Speaker 13: A point of order. Are we having a controversy case placed into the record here? I thought we were just obtaining information.

Subodh: No [inaudible 01:19:21]-

Speaker 13: If you've already tried the case, do we need to retry it?

Subodh: Well, I don't think were talking about the case, I think we're talking about information that Representative Clyde is aware of, and can testify about. Now, it happens to relate to information that was presented in a case that is now resolved, but that doesn't mean that these things didn't happen, and aren't a part of the voting issues that are the subject of this hearing. So, I don't understand the objection, I don't think it's a fair objection, and I think this witness has the ability to comment on these issues.

Scott: Yeah, I have a point of order too this is Scott, I thought Diane you said we could ask one question, and then a follow up.

Diane Citrino: Yes. I agree. I was seeing that we had a little more time, and I was allowing this follow up. I'm gonna allow the question, and allow Kathleen to comment. Representative Clyde. I understand Subodh [inaudible 01:20:30] question to be directed in a more general sense. I think he was disclosing that he participated in a lawsuit with you, but we as David Forte mentioned, we don't want to retry the lawsuit, but if you can comment, and directly just answer his question, we'd appreciate that.
Kathleen Clyde: I will just say generally, this has been a difficult environment, where many problematic things have been said. There's one quote that I can remember that received national attention, and it was the Chairman of the Republican Party in franklin County, Doug Price, saying that we shouldn't accommodate the African American voter turn out machine when it comes to this early voting, and the fights over the in person early voting process.

There have been many witnesses, who have come before the legislature and described these various pieces of legislation that have been signed into law as discriminatory against African Americans, and other marginalized communities. Whether it's the billboards, whether it's the comments, whether it's failing to address problems in our election system that particularly affect certain voters. These are problems that need to be addressed. We need to come together. We need to work to make our system as fair and accessible to every Ohioan, You know, I'll leave it at that.

Diane Citrino: Okay.

Ed Leonard: This is Director Leonard. If I could-

Diane Citrino: [inaudible 01:22:27].

Ed Leonard: I'd like to just come to the defense of Boards of Elections in that, the employees at the Board of Elections, regardless of party are genuinely trying to ensure everybody can vote. I understand the Board members are comprised of folks who represent their political parties, but the staff at Boards of Elections across the state, work to try and allow everyone to vote, particularly when it comes to provisional ballots that we work to try, every opportunity, and every effort is made to try and count those provisional ballots, to attempt to identify and make sure that if we can identify that individual voter. If there's issues about someone filing it out incorrectly, and trying to find that information on our system to identify that correct address, that might be a number transposed, or might be something erroneous about it, but trying to identify the information, so that we can count that ballot.

There have been some restrictions. The Secretary of State imposed a restriction in terms of what information we can look at, that we're only allowed to look at the state wide database, that we can't look to ... Cause counties, we would look at auditor records. We would look at treasurer records, we would look at ever governmental record that we could try and access, to try find information that would help us validate the accuracy of that provisional ballot. The Secretary of State has restricted that, so we can now only look at the state wide voter database. But again, our boards of elections regularly work to try and count the vote, and try and make ourselves available to ensure that voter have access to a ballot. I just wanted to state that, cause it seems like there's a lot of discussion about Boards of Elections, and casting it in a negative light.
Diane Citrino: Thank you.

Kathleen Clyde: Let me just jump in, and agree with Ed Leonard, and the good work done by election officials across the state, and our professional staff. I think a lot of the problems I'm describing have happened at the legislative level, and the state level, but our election officials persist, and do an excellent job serving Ohio voters. I would like to see the environmental laws that they operate under change, and us to work on these problem areas that I've discussed.

Diane Citrino: And, Mr. Leonard, this is Diane Citrino, I was wondering, when you said you try and validate it, so if you saw that there was a number transposed, is there a way to fix that?

Ed Leonard: No, but we can, again try and find that voter in the system, even if they may not be in the voter registration, the state wide voter registration database, but trying to find the information that will allow us to consider that provisional ballot valid.

Diane Citrino: Okay, we have time for one more question, so I wanted to open it up to our committee members again. Is there someone who would like to ask another question?

Scott: Hi, this is Scott, I'll go if I could.

Diane Citrino: Sure, go ahead Scott.

Scott: Yeah. Again, I want to thank the panelists. They were terrific. My earlier point was that you had limited us to one question, I know Subodh came in late, so he didn't hear that instruction, so that's all I have to say about that. But, it's pretty clear to me that Representative Clyde's identified a number of continuing problems, so I'd like to direct my final question to Director Leonard, when we vote unanimously to invite the people to present that we did, and you two are on that list obviously. The reason we pick Franklin County, because in 2006, in the transcript that we read, there were a lot of problems in Franklin county. It was not on your watch, so I'm not blaming you, I just wondered what you think now, that we're in 2018, whether things are a lot better in Franklin County, whether there is still room for improvement in Franklin County, etc.

Ed Leonard: I think we have made a lot of improvements, and I think I went through a lot of those in my remarks, in terms of changes that we've made with regard to poll worker training. Some of the implementation of poll pads, and the voting location based voting have really helped us reduce the number of lines. The fact that we are amongst the counties that do aggressively advertise during the presidential elections, the early vote and absentee availability, which helps us reduce the number of voters who show up at the polls, and thus reduce the lines, which I think were the biggest issue discussed regarding the 2004 election,
Diane Citrino: No, we don't have any [inaudible 01:29:30] sorry. There's no further time. We have to, we only have the recording for a limited time, so I want to thank the panelists, the members of the committee, members of the public for attending this meeting. The record is going to remain open through April 9, 2018. So, this conversation can continue in written form. You can submit a written comment to MWOJNERSKI@USCCR.gov, and that information should appear on your screen, or mail it to USCCR, 55 West Monroe Street, Suite 410, Chicago, Illinois.

There it is, on the screen. 60603. We will follow up with everyone in attendance, to provide the minutes, and a transcript from this meeting, and a link to access those records. We are going to als notify everyone when the committee is meeting for discussion, and when a report based on these meetings that we've had, and again, this was the second of a two part series are ready. So, thank you again, we appreciate your time here today. We've all learned a great deal, and again, we're very, deeply appreciative. Thank you now.

Ed Leonard: Thank you.

Diane Citrino: This meeting is adjourned. Bye.

Operator: Thank you, and again, that does conclude the meeting, thank you for participating. You may disconnect at this time.

To submit additional testimony in writing please email Melissa Wojnaroski at mwojnaroski@usccr.gov by April 9, 2018
My name is Camille Wimbish, and I am the director of the Ohio Voter Rights Coalition (OVRC). The OVRC is a network of non-partisan organizations who are committed to free, fair and accessible elections. Over the last several years, we have testified against numerous pieces of restrictive legislation in the Ohio Statehouse. We also organize a non-partisan election protection program in coordination with the Lawyers’ Committee for Civil Rights Under Law, providing assistance to Ohio voters who call the 866-OUR-VOTE hotline.

I am pleased to share that Ohio is doing several things well when it comes to voting access. Ohio accepts a number of forms of voter identification such as utility bills, government checks, or pay stubs, bucking the trend of strict photo ID. Because of our history of long lines on Election Day, Ohio also has a generous 29 day no-fault absentee voting period. Approximately 1/3 of all Ohio voters now vote early.

Ohio has also made strides in modernizing our election system. In 2016, Ohio joined the Electronic Resource Information Center (ERIC), an inter-state data sharing service sponsored by the Pew Center, which improves the accuracy of the voter rolls. In 2017, Ohio implemented online voter registration, which is universally praised for being convenient for voters and cost-effective for election officials. Additionally, voters are now able to track the receipt of their absentee ballots, improving voter confidence in early voting.

Ohio voters are also challenged in a number of ways by a spate of restrictive voting laws and practices, which make it more difficult for voters to cast their ballot and have their vote counted. I will briefly outline a three significant restrictions below:

- The Purge: Ohio is one of the most aggressive states for purging voters for failing to vote. Secretary of State Jon Husted has established a practice of mailing a postcard to voters who do not vote within a two year period, asking them to confirm their registration. Voters who fail to respond or vote within the following four years are removed from the rolls without further notice. In advance of the 2016 election, tens of thousands of voters (primarily African Americans from urban areas) were removed from the rolls, despite still being eligible to vote. The U.S. Supreme Court now has the final say whether this practice violates the National Voter Registration Act of 1993. Ultimately, infrequent voters are most at risk for losing their right to vote, which only erodes people’s faith in the system.

- Loss of Golden Week: In 2014, the legislature passed SB 238, which eliminated Ohio’s same-day registration period in which the last week of voter registration overlapped with the first week of early voting. The bill sponsor claimed that the change was needed to curb voter fraud, however this claim was unsubstantiated as ballots cast during Golden Week were segregated and were not counted until the voter’s eligibility could be verified. Litigation worked its way all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court, but ultimately the elimination of Golden Week was upheld. The loss of this cure period means that for the majority of voters who need to update their registration, they are forced to vote provisionally. In 2016, approximately 15% of all provisional ballots cast in Ohio were not able to be counted.

- Absentee Ballot Restrictions: In 2014, the Ohio General Assembly passed SB 205, which changed the procedure for sending absentee ballot applications. Several urban counties had traditionally sent absentee ballot applications to voters every year as a cost-effective way to encourage early voting. But under the new law, absentee ballot applications can only be mailed by the Secretary of State if the legislature appropriates the money to do so. In practice, this means that voters only receive applications in even-numbered years, leaving voters confused about whether they will receive an application in the mail, or whether they must request one. Voters would be far better served if government officials sent absentee ballot applications for every election. Additionally, SB 205 instituted hyper-technical rules that disqualify ballots for paperwork errors such as writing a name in legible cursive instead of print, omitting a zip code from an address, or missing a single digit from a social security number. Voters deserve better than a game of “gotcha” when it comes to their ballot.

Ohio has made frequent changes to its voting rules over the last decade and yet the state has not prioritized voter education. Combined with voting restrictions, the lack of voter information is a one-two punch. Community groups and non profit organizations have had to stand in the gap to provide voters with information about the mechanics of how, where and when to vote. Additionally, voter education needs to be strengthened in the following areas:

- Voter registration updates: Approximately 10% of voters move each year, and yet many voters are not aware that their Ohio voter registration does not automatically update when they move. They may not realize their registration is no longer valid until they attempt to early vote or show up at the polls on Election Day and often their only recourse is to vote provisionally. Voters need information to encourage them to verify their registration in advance of every election.

- Send important mailings to inactive voters: Voters who do not vote within a two year period are designated as “Inactive” voters and do not receive important election mailings, despite there being no evidence that the address is invalid. Excluded mailings include absentee ballot applications and change of polling place notifications. In 2016, for example, the Secretary of State excluded 13% of registered voters because they were deemed inactive¹. Many voters are accustomed to only voting every 4 years during presidential elections, and are thus may not receive the basic election information they need to vote and/or have their vote counted.

- Felon re-enfranchisement: Ohio has a favorable felony re-enfranchisement policy, in that allows citizens who have been convicted of a felony can simply re-register once they have completed their sentence. They do not have to wait until they are on probation or parole, and they may even register and vote from jail. Sadly, these facts are not widely known among the public, which serves as a barrier, particularly for people of color.

In short, there is a lot of work that can be done to remove barriers to the ballot box in Ohio. We welcome ideas for how to make it easier for more citizens to participate in our democracy. Thank you for the opportunity to submit testimony.
Disability Rights Ohio is a non-profit corporation with a mission to advocate for the human, civil and legal rights of people with disabilities in Ohio. Disability Rights Ohio is also Ohio’s Protection and Advocacy System (P&A) and Client Assistance Program (CAP).

Disability Rights Ohio is governed by a nonprofit board that guides the organization’s programmatic priorities. Disability Rights Ohio receives funding from federal grants to advocate for Ohioans with disabilities in a wide range of issues, including employment, mental illness, developmental disabilities, assistive technology, traumatic brain injury, victims of crime, and voting. Voting rights for people with disabilities is an important aspect of Disability Rights Ohio’s work, and is reflected in the organization’s priorities.

Disability Rights Ohio’s voting activities

Disability Rights Ohio receives federal funding through the Help American Vote Act to support voting advocacy on behalf of Ohioans with disabilities. This work includes education and outreach to voters with disabilities and professionals in the disability field, direct and systemic voter advocacy, and operating a voter hotline every Election Day. Disability Rights Ohio also engages in voting-related litigation.

How voting impacts disability rights

Title II of the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) not only prohibits discrimination based on an individual’s disability; it also seeks to ensure full participation of people with disabilities in society by removing barriers to access. The ADA embodies in the law the key elements of the independent living movement: nondiscrimination, integration, and full inclusion of people with disabilities as members of society. People must be treated as individuals, not as stereotypes or caricatures. Full participation in the political process is a central value of the disability movement. Broad protections, both constitutional and statutory, exist to ensure that people with disabilities have full access to the ballot. While both HAVA and the ADA provide broad protections to ensure voting access by people with disabilities, implementation in practice is not always smooth, and antiquated notions about people with disabilities persist.

1 See 42 U.S.C. § 12131 et seq.

Barriers to voting

Disability Rights Ohio focuses its work on the voting barriers faced by people with disabilities. Several issues have emerged over the last decade. The following are examples of barriers experienced by Ohioans with disabilities and the advocacy efforts engaged in by Disability Rights Ohio to increase voting access.

STEREOTYPES AND DISCRIMINATION

The Ohio Constitution provides that any U.S. citizen who is a resident of the state is a qualified “elector” or voter. But the Constitution also contains antiquated and discriminatory language that “No idiot, or insane person, shall be entitled to the privileges of an elector.” This class of voters is the only one that is conclusively disqualified in Ohio’s constitution. These terms are offensive relics of an 1851 constitution.

Disability Rights Ohio advocated to have these offensive terms removed from the Ohio Constitution before the recent Ohio Constitutional Modernization Commission, noting the conflict with federal law protecting the right to vote for people with disabilities and the illusory nature of capacity to vote. Despite Disability Rights Ohio’s efforts, no changes to update this language were made through the modernization process. Fortunately, these antiquated terms are not used in current Ohio statutory or administrative law, and this provision is essentially not being implemented in Ohio law.

In fact, the only relevant statutory section regarding competency to vote allows for probate court judges to “adjudicate” as “incompetent for the purpose of voting” individuals subject to another statute regulating involuntary hospitalization. This provision adjudicating an individual incompetent for voting purposes does not appear to be widely utilized in Ohio.

However, some probate guardianship application forms do have a check box question as to competency to vote. Disability Rights Ohio is concerned that someone might argue that checking this box on the application (an action taken by the applicant, not the court) supports a finding of incompetency for voting purposes if the guardianship is granted, even where no hearing or examination of this issue ever occurred. While Disability Rights Ohio is unaware of this problem having surfaced, if it did it would be a significant violation of an individual’s due process rights.

STEREOTYPES AND MISINFORMATION

While great strides have been made in accessibility, many common misconceptions remain about disability voting rights. These misconceptions often arise from paternalistic views of people with disabilities, lack of understanding about the capabilities and communication methods of people with disabilities, and lack of knowledge about technology available to voters with disabilities. Disability Rights Ohio has released publications and conducted extensive outreach efforts to help educate the public about these misconceptions, several of which are outlined below.

First misconception: “You can’t vote if you have a guardian.”

While in some states, guardianship may limit or even prohibit an individual’s voting rights, people with guardians in Ohio can still vote in Ohio elections. The only exception to this rule is where an individual has been specifically adjudicated incompetent for voting purposes, and this type of finding is very rare. Indeed, as outlined in the Glancy Consent Order signed by the Ohio Secretary of State, registration to vote creates a presumption of capacity to vote.⁶

Second misconception: “How can you understand enough to vote if you can’t verbally communicate?”

Voting eligibility criteria in Ohio involves residence, citizenship, and age. There is no requirement that a voter be able to communicate verbally. Assistive technology also exists to help people with disabilities communicate by other means. In addition, Ohioans who wish to register to vote who cannot sign their name on the registration form can still register to vote with the assistance of another who attests that the voter indicated a desire to register. Finally, capacity is not a valid challenge to a person’s ability to vote at the polls.⁹

Third misconception: “If you are blind, how can you independently complete a ballot?”

Under both state and federal law, voters with disabilities—including those who are blind or visually impaired—must be given the same opportunity for access and participation as others. The Help American Vote Act (HAVA) requires access to private and independent voting, and accessible voting machines.\textsuperscript{10} The ADA also requires accessible voting procedures, routes of travel at the polling location, and voting machines. State law requires poll workers to assist voters with disabilities at the poll if requested.\textsuperscript{11}

ACCESSIBILITY BARRIERS

While laws such as HAVA and the ADA require equal access to the voting process, voting access issues for people with disabilities do persist. Below are some of the major advocacy successes and remaining shortcomings in voting access for people with disabilities in Ohio.

Polling locations

In recent years, there has been a considerable push to ensure that polling locations are physically accessible for people with disabilities. While overall polling place accessibility has improved dramatically, voters with disabilities still run into problems at the polls. For instance, a 2017 voter survey conducted by Self Advocates Becoming Empowered (SABE) found that some voters who use wheelchairs have difficulty navigating around the voting machines (e.g. voting machines too close together, loose cords), problems with an accessible route of travel to the voting area or entrance, problems with accessible parking, and problems with inoperable wheelchair ramps or elevators.\textsuperscript{12}

Poll workers

Disability Rights Ohio also conducted an informal survey in March 2016 asking individuals to identify barriers to voting. The most prevalent issue identified was problems interacting with poll workers.\textsuperscript{13} These results suggest that additional training for poll workers on topics such as how to set up the polling location to be physically accessible, how to use all available equipment including accessible machines, and how to communicate effectively with voters who may have difficulties speaking, hearing, or writing would be beneficial. The Franklin County Board of Elections, for example, has begun training that seeks to specialize certain staff on different topics in the hopes of creating more positive and accessible voter experiences.

Accessible voting information and registration

People with disabilities must also have access to voter resources such as registration or change of address forms and other voting materials. Today, this information is frequently accessed on the internet, so it is critical that these materials be made available in accessible formats.\textsuperscript{14}

\end{footnotes}
In December 2015, the Ohio Secretary of State’s website had many accessibility problems for people who are blind or have print disabilities. After attempts to resolve the issue informally, Disability Rights Ohio filed a federal lawsuit under Title II of the ADA as co-counsel on behalf of individual plaintiffs and the National Federation of the Blind seeking remediation by the Secretary’s office. The federal court issued an injunction in February 2017 ordering the Secretary of State to make his website accessible by September 2017. Recent testing showed that much of the website is now accessible, including online registration and change of address functions. The Secretary of State’s office is currently working to fix remaining problems, which include inaccessible PDFs.

In addition, Ohio recently implemented new electronic poll books, and is also in the process of working with boards of elections to replace outdated voting machines. These new technologies must be accessible for people with disabilities under the ADA. In addition, voters with disabilities often utilize a myriad of assistive technology devices for communication or mobility. Ongoing poll worker and board of elections staff training is critical to ensure that these workers know how to operate the technology, and provide accommodations as modifications as needed to ensure equal access to voting services.

Accessible absentee ballots

In the same ADA lawsuit on behalf of the National Federation of the Blind, plaintiffs challenged the accessibility of Ohio's absentee ballot marking system. Under the current paper absentee ballot system, voters who are blind or who have print disabilities could not submit a ballot privately and independently, thus denying them equal access to the absentee ballot program. After a ruling in the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, the Ohio Secretary of State recently issued a directive ordering all county boards of elections to adopt and implement accessible electronic ballot marking tools by the November 2018 election. Now for the first time, voters who are blind or who have print disabilities will be able to absentee vote privately and independently.

Accessible signature options

Some voters with disabilities cannot physically sign their name on a voter registration or poll book, and need alternative options to affirm intent to vote. Ohio law does provide a process through which a voter can sign with an “X” or have someone sign applicable forms affirming under penalty of elections fraud that the voter wishes to submit the form. Confusion with this process occasionally resurfaces during election season, and additional training on the law for both board or elections staff and poll workers may be warranted.

Inadequate accessible transportation options

Disability Rights Ohio’s March 2016 survey identified transportation as the second most prevalent issue for people with disabilities to access in-person voting. While some voters with disabilities can utilize their own vehicle, the 2017 SABE report found that many voters with disabilities rely on family, friends, or service providers to provide transportation. Some use public transportation, but service availability to polling places can limit this option.\textsuperscript{17}

\textit{Institutional isolation}

Ohio houses tens of thousands of people with disabilities in institutional settings such as intermediate care facilities, nursing homes, and psychiatric hospitals. Lengths of stay vary widely based on a number of factors, including available resources, needs, and caregivers’ decision making. A stay can be for just a few days, causing only a short-term disruption to an individual’s daily life, but for many the stay in institutionalized settings may last many years and can result in long-term isolation from the community. When individuals are isolated from the community, they might not have ready access to or know about their fundamental right to vote. Disability Rights Ohio conducts annual outreach efforts to speak with residents and staff in institutional settings to educate them on voting rights and resources.

\textit{Unexpectedly hospitalized voters}

Disability Rights Ohio has also focused efforts on one type of institutionalized setting where voter access is particularly susceptible to falling through the cracks. Existing Ohio law provides a special process for voters to obtain an absentee ballot if they are unexpectedly hospitalized on or shortly before Election Day.\textsuperscript{18} While the law applies to all unexpectedly hospitalized voters as well as those whose children are unexpectedly hospitalized, it has proven to particularly impact voters with mental illness who are admitted to psychiatric hospitals shortly before Election Day.

The law provides that when a voter is hospitalized within their county of residence, the voter can make a request up until 3 p.m. on Election Day for two elections officials or an eligible family member to deliver the ballot to the voter personally, and then return the completed ballot to the board of elections. This process has worked in the past and helped voters exercise their voting rights despite extenuating circumstances.

However, for voters who are not hospitalized in their county of residence, there is no option for board of elections in-person delivery. As a consequence, out-of-county hospitalized voters must either have an eligible family member pick up, deliver, and return the ballot for them, or they must mail the ballot to the board of elections themselves. But under Ohio law, absentee ballots must be postmarked prior to Election Day,\textsuperscript{19} so as a practical matter, returning by mail is not an option for day of Election requests.

Disability Rights Ohio first encountered this problem in 2012 when a young woman hospitalized in a psychiatric hospital outside of her county of residence did not receive her requested absentee ballot, and neither the county board of elections nor the Secretary of State’s office would agree to ensure her access to a ballot. Under the ADA, a public entity must modify its usual policies and procedures when necessary to ensure equal access to individuals with disabilities. After trying to resolve the issue through negotiation, Disability Rights Ohio filed a lawsuit to require the county board of election and the Secretary of State to make the necessary modifications so this young woman could vote. The Court agreed with Disability Rights Ohio.\textsuperscript{20}

Despite subsequent attempts by Disability Rights Ohio to work with the Secretary of State to address future similar problems, no meaningful steps were taken by the Secretary’s office until the November 2016 election.

In 2016, after additional negotiations with Disability Rights Ohio, the Secretary did issue a very narrow temporary directive and accompanying forms. However, the new forms are complicated and the directive severely limits applicability of the process. Now, hospitalized voters can only request an emergency ballot if they were hospitalized after the regular deadline for requesting an absentee ballot (noon the Saturday before Election Day). This new limitation is narrower than the Ohio Revised Code language on emergency hospitalization, which does not limit its application to only those admitted to the hospital after the regular absentee ballot request deadline.

In the 2016 general election, Disability Rights Ohio received calls from more than 20 psychiatric hospitals, and gave advice to more than 50 voters about how to get a ballot on Election Day while hospitalized. Many of these voters had been admitted to the hospital during the week prior to the election but were in no condition to request an absentee ballot within the Saturday deadline. Some did not have an eligible family member to pick up and submit their ballots. While many voters were able to vote with limited assistance, Disability Rights Ohio had to directly intervene and contact the Secretary of State’s office to help 13 of them exercise their rights to vote. Many other hospitalized voters likely did not get to vote at all because they were admitted prior to the Saturday cutoff and did not obtain assistance from Disability Rights Ohio.

After the 2016 general election, the Ohio Secretary of State issued a permanent directive and modified the applicable forms, creating a new form through which voters must “declare, under penalty of election falsification, that [they are] a qualified elector with a qualifying disability under the [ADA].”\textsuperscript{21} The same narrow limitations, however, still apply, and hospitalized voters will continue to face barriers to voting until addressed more thoroughly.

HARMFUL IMPACT OF POVERTY AND OHIO VOTING POLICIES

Disproportionate impact of poverty

Voters with disabilities disproportionately experience poverty and thus the barriers to voting commonly experienced by voters with limited incomes. This includes limited voting hours, erratic job schedules, child care needs, homelessness or lack of permanent housing, inadequate or inaccessible transportation, and the costs associated with obtaining a photo identification, to name a few.

Removal of voters from voter rolls

Current Ohio law includes a “supplemental process” which allows the Secretary of State to target voters who fail to vote in a designated period for removal from the voter rolls on the presumption that such voters have moved. As a direct result of this process, voters who remain otherwise fully eligible to vote are stripped from the registration rolls and denied their right to vote. Registrants are targeted for removal from the voter rolls after failing to vote in one election and could ultimately be removed if they do not vote in the following four-year period.

In 2015 alone, hundreds of thousands of voters were removed under Ohio’s purge practice. This means that many eligible voters are unable to cast ballots on Election Day, despite registering where necessary, being motivated to vote in the particular election, and in some cases, even arriving at the correct polling place and waiting in line.

In 2016, the A. Phillip Randolph Institute and other plaintiffs filed a lawsuit against Ohio’s Secretary of State challenging this practice and claiming that the National Voter Registration Act (NVRA) does not allow states to initiate the voter purge process based solely on their failure to vote. Plaintiffs argued that allowing states to disenfranchise voters on this basis is contrary to the NVRA’s general purpose of broadening participation of the electorate and the Act’s specific goal of expanding access for historically disenfranchised groups. It would also unnecessarily and unjustifiably tread on the fundamental right to vote of many Americans already facing significant obstacles to political participation.

This lawsuit is now awaiting a decision by the Supreme Court of the United States. Disability Rights Ohio, its national affiliate the National Disability Rights Network, and other disability and civil rights organizations filed an amicus curiae brief to advocate for the removal of access barriers and enforcement of rights to participate in Ohio’s electoral process.

Conclusion and Recommendations

While state and federal laws provide protections for equal access to voting for Ohioans with disabilities, barriers to access still persist. Ohio has made progress in removing these barriers, but in many instances such progress occurred only after focused advocacy by Disability Rights Ohio or others. Ohio should make accessibility a priority. This must include effective policies for procuring and implementing accessible information technology in all aspects of the voting process, and effective training for election officials and poll workers about the rights of people with disabilities and how to provide an accessible voting experience.

We thank the Ohio Advisory Committee for undertaking these important issues and for considering the experiences of Ohioans with disabilities in their report and recommendations to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights.

22 See Ohio Rev. Code § 3503.21
Thank you for the opportunity to speak before the Ohio Advisory Committee to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights in March. Thanks also to Mr. Tryon for his follow-up question, which affords me the opportunity to elaborate on the topic of non-citizen voting. These comments are of course only made on my own behalf, not that of The Ohio State University, the Moritz College of Law, or any other entity or person. The institutional affiliation above is provided for the purpose of identification only.

Mr. Tryon asks for recommendations regarding non-citizen voting. He prefaces his question with a comment that helpfully distinguishes between the reality and the perception of non-citizen voting. I agree that it is important to recognize that these are two very different things. It is, moreover, essential that any recommendations be informed by evidence on the character and magnitude of the problems at hand. We cannot intelligently consider solutions to any problem without examining the evidence regarding its nature and severity. Accordingly, I discuss the research regarding the reality and perception of non-citizen voting, before considering what might be done to address both of these issues.

As for the reality of non-citizen voting in the U.S., the available evidence demonstrates that it is vanishingly rare. The most recent in-depth study of the subject is a paper published earlier this year by David Cottrell, Michael C. Herron, and Sean J. Westwood of Dartmouth College.\(^1\) As the paper describes, the last presidential election featured prominent and highly publicized allegations of widespread voter fraud, including noncitizen voting. This study, which relied on multiple regression analyses, found “little evidence consistent with widespread and systematic fraud fomented by non-citizens.”\(^2\) This finding is consistent with prior research on the subject, which the article reviews.\(^3\) It is also consistent with common sense. While proving a negative is inherently difficult, it should come as no surprise that there is so little evidence of non-citizen voting, given the potential for jail time and even deportation as well as the infinitesimally small likelihood that any illegal non-citizen’s vote will affect the result.\(^4\)

Another recent study employs a different methodology but arrives at the same conclusion: that non-citizen voting is exceedingly uncommon. The Brennan Center for Justice at New York University School of Law examined the problem from the perspective of local election officials, reaching out to those administering elections in places with large number of non-citizen residents.\(^5\) After interviewing people in 42 electoral jurisdictions collectively encompassing 23.5 million 2016 voters, the researchers found that only 30 incidents of suspected non-citizen voting fraud were referred for further investigation or prosecution. It bears emphasis that not all these are instances of proven illegal voting by non-citizens. But even assuming they were, it would amount to just 0.00013% of votes cast in these jurisdictions (just over one in a million). This is consistent with a prior survey conducted by the Republican National Lawyers Association. Examining prosecutions and convictions across the country between 2000 and 2011, the RNLA identified just 24 cases of non-citizen registration or voting.

\(^3\) Id. at 125, 138.

\(^4\) Id. at 125.

Mr. Tryon's comment references a 2014 article in Electoral Studies by Jesse T. Richman and Gulshan A. Chattha of Old Dominion University, and David C. Earnest of George Mason. That analysis relied on survey data from 2008 and 2010, to find that some people identifying themselves as non-citizens reported voting in those years. Extrapolating from their survey data, they concluded that “more than three percent of non-citizens reported voting” in 2010. Other scholars have severely criticized the methodology used in that study and on that basis expressed doubt about the reliability of its findings. Without getting too deep into the methodological weeds, the main problem is the focus on a small number of people in a much larger sample, some of whom may have misreported their status, leading to a substantial overestimate of how many non-citizens actually voted. As explained by Stephen Ansolabehere of Harvard, Samantha Luks of YouGov (which conducted the surveys), and Brian Shaffner of University of Massachusetts, Amherst, the 2014 study “presents a biased estimate of the rate at which non-citizens voted in recent elections,” and its anomalous results are “completely accounted for by very low frequency measurement error.” When this error is corrected for, Dr. Ansolabehere and his co-authors conclude, “the likely percent of non-citizen voters in recent US elections is 0.”

While the lead author of the 2014 study, Jesse Richman, disagrees that non-citizen participation in elections is zero, he has since acknowledged that their study led some people to exaggerate the magnitude of non-citizen voting. As he puts it, “there has been a tendency to misread our results as proof of massive voter fraud, which we don’t think they are.” He goes on to say that “our results suggest that almost all elections in the US are not determined by non-citizen participation, with occasional and very rare potential exceptions.”15 The back-and-forth among scholars that has followed the 2014 study is exactly what one would expect and hope for among academics who disagree on how to interpret the data. But as Dr. Richman has acknowledged, the title of the 2014 paper (“Do non-citizens vote in U.S. elections?”) misled some people: “The title suggested a ‘yes’ answer, where our ultimate conclusion was really one more that they probably wouldn’t. Maybe if there was a really, really close race, they might, but otherwise [they] probably wouldn’t have much effect on the outcome of the elections.”16

This exchange illuminates the disjunction between perception and reality when it comes to non-citizen voting. The evidence shows non-citizen voting to be a very small problem in reality. But the perception of non-citizen voting is a different matter. There is evidence that many voters falsely perceive voter fraud in general and non-citizen voting in particular to be a significant problem.17 In a 2007 survey, for example, 26% of people expressed the view that vote fraud such as multiple voting or voting by those who are not U.S. citizens was “very common.”18 More recent surveys are consistent with this study. A 2017 Rasmussen survey found that 27% say that vote fraud is a “very serious” problem.19

The available research thus shows that there is a gap between the reality and the perception of non-citizen voting. The former is an extremely small problem; the latter a larger one. It is therefore appropriate to think of this as a “two pronged problem,” as Mr. Tryon puts it. Accordingly, in thinking about solutions, we must separate reality and perception.

Let me start with reality. The best solution to actual non-citizen voting – minuscule though it is – is to bring criminal prosecutions where it can be proven. Such prosecutions have in fact been brought in the past, as noted above. The evidence indicates that such prosecutions have been and continue to be an effective means by which to deter and punish illegal non-citizen voting. Where such prosecutions are brought in good faith based on reliable evidence that someone has violated criminal laws, they are unlikely to discourage eligible citizens from voting.

A more significant problem is the mistaken perception that non-citizen voting is widespread. I agree with Mr. Tryon that accusing people of “bigotry” is an inadequate response. While some people’s beliefs on this topic may stem from some form of bias, we need not presume latent racism to explain why so many people incorrectly believe that non-citizen voting is widespread. Given the substantial amount of misinformation that has swirled around the topic for the many years, it is not surprising that many people harbor erroneous beliefs about the frequency of non-citizen voting.

In my opinion, the best response to public misperceptions regarding non-citizen voting is truthful information. This view stems from my longstanding commitment to the First Amendment and the constitutional values for which it stands. As Justice Brandeis once wrote: “If there be time to expose through discussion the falsehood and fallacies, to avert the evil by the processes of education, the remedy to be applied is more speech, not enforced silence.”20 There are limits to this adage, of course, but the basic principle is as important today as it was a century ago. The best antidote to false beliefs is reliable information, truthful counter-speech, and public education.

In my view, public education is where the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights could perform the most useful role. As I have explained, there is a disconnect between perception and reality when it comes to non-citizen voting. The Commission could help ameliorate this problem by disseminating accurate information about just how uncommon non-citizen voting in particular – and voter fraud more generally – really is. Raising additional barriers to voting based on a false perception of widespread fraud would clearly be a mistake, one that would only serve to exacerbate the problem of inaccurate perceptions. A much better approach is to counter mistaken beliefs with truthful information about the infrequency of non-citizen voting.
